To prove a substantive element of the offense charged, evidence of other crimes, wrongs, or acts is admissible without regard to its similarity to the offense, 81 except where the evidence of other acts, wrongs, or crimes relates to a substantive count by establishing a required mental ingredient of the offense, 82 such as intent. 83

Evidence of defendant's subsequent arrest for transporting large quantity of marijuana was properly admitted since it was similar to charged offense which involved arrangements between defendant and others to transport large quantities of marijuana, manner in which marijuana was packaged was similar, and although defendant was driver in subsequent act, he arranged for transportation of marijuana on his employer's trucks in charged offense. United States v Olivo (1996, CA10 Okla) 80 F3d 1466.

§ 423 --To show identity or modus operandi

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

When evidence of defendant's other crimes, acts, or wrongs is offered to identify the defendant as the perpetrator of the charged offense through a demonstration that both this offense and the "other crimes" show the "modus operandi," "handiwork," or "signature" of the defendant, evidence of such "other crimes" must bear a high degree of similarity to the charged offense, 84 or to an event so closely related to the charged offense that the similarity between such evidence and the related event serves to identify the defendant as the person who committed the charged offense. 85

To show a unique design or plan that would help indirectly to establish that the defendant committed the crime charged, the extrinsic acts must have borne a singularly strong resemblance to the pattern of the offense charged; only when the other acts share truly distinctive features with the crime with which the defendant is charged can they support the inference that the defendant probably committed the crime. 86 The defendant cannot be identified as the perpetrator of the charged act simply because he has at other times committed the same commonplace variety of criminal act. 87 However, to be admissible under Rule 404(b) on the issue of identity, the other act need not be an exact duplicate of the act charged. The court must make a reasoned determination as to whether the characteristics relied upon are sufficiently idiosyncratic to permit an inference of pattern for purposes of proof. Where the acts are comparable in several important ways, discrepancies, though not unimportant, go to the weight of the challenged evidence and not to its admissibility. Disparities must be weighed evenhandedly against similarities, giving due measure to the number of each and to the distinctiveness of the attributes. Generally, where evidence of other acts is admitted, the comparison involves the conjunction of several identifying characteristics with the presence of some highly distinctive quality. The more distinctive the identifiers, the fewer of them need be present to demonstrate the requisite signature. 88

Case authorities:

Admission of evidence of defendant's prior armed robbery conviction as similar transaction was not error, where although defendant argued that there was not sufficient similarity between earlier offense and offenses presently at issue, in both cases two or more people were involved in planning of armed robberies, perpetrators in both cases were similarly dressed and in both cases threatened managers of small grocery stores with guns, both armed robberies occurred in early morning hours, and while some differences between two armed robberies existed, there was no requirement that armed robberies be identical in every aspect. Murphy v State (1994) 212 Ga App 153, 442 SE2d 2, 94 Fulton County D R 452, reconsideration dismd (Feb 23, 1994).

In prosecution for child molestation of 10-year-old girl, trial court properly admitted prior conviction for sodomy involving 16-year-old male victim, where male victim was mentally impaired, and functioned at mental age of five to seven. Tidwell v State (1995) 219 Ga App 233, 464 SE2d 834, 95 Fulton County D R 3558.

The prosecutor's argument to the jury in a prosecution for the murder of a child, "Now, who acts with malice, who bends arms, who hits, who chokes, who acts with malice?"

There he sits," was not an improper misstatement of law that jurors could infer defendant's identity as the perpetrator from his malicious character but was a proper reference to the fact that the jury could consider evidence of defendant's prior acts on the issue of identity. State v Burr (1995) 341 NC 263, 461 SE2d 602.

Evidence of defendant's participation in a robbery an hour before the robbery and two murders for which defendant was on trial was admissible under Rule 404(b) to show defendant's identity as a perpetrator of the murders where, in both the prior robbery and the crimes against the murder victims, there were at least two individuals involved who incapacitated the victims by pulling their clothing down around their elbows and hands, and at least one person was robbed during both events. The evidence tended to show that defendant punched the prior robbery victim in the face and that the male murder victim had "areas of abrasion and bruising on his face"; and the similar acts and close proximity in time thus tend to indicate that the same person was involved in both the prior robbery and the murders. Furthermore, the probative value of defendant's involvement in the prior robbery outweighs any potential for unfair prejudice. § 424 --To show intent or absence of mistake or accident, or to rebut entrapment or duress defense

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Generally, similarity between the evidence of other acts sought to be admitted and the charged offense is required when evidence is offered to prove absence of mistake or accident⁸⁹ or intent.⁹⁰ Similarly, evidence of prior crimes to rebut a defense of entrapment is not relevant unless it tends to prove that the defendant was engaged in illegal operations in some way similar to those charged in the indictment.⁹¹

When admitted for the purpose of showing intent, prior acts need not be duplicates of the charged crime but must be sufficiently similar to support an inference of criminal intent.⁹² The fact that a prior or subsequent similar act sought to be admitted involves the purchase of drugs rather than a sale of drugs as charged in the instant case does not make the evidence inadmissible where the announced reason for the purchase was to sell the drugs subsequently, and therefore both transactions in essence involve distribution. Furthermore, the fact that the drug involved in the other act has a legitimate medical use while that involved in the instant case has no such use does not affect admissibility where both transactions are patently illegal; the relevant factor is the type of activity undertaken, not the identity of the drugs. 93

Where the defense is that the defendant acted under duress, the relevance of the evidence does not necessarily depend upon the similarity of the other acts or crimes but rather on the circumstances surrounding the occurrence of the other crimes, and in this situation, similarity of the other acts or crimes may therefore not be a requirement. 94

Where the other acts or crimes sought to be admitted under FRE Rule 404(b) form part of the common scheme or plan which includes the charged offense, 98 or where evidence of "other crimes" is offered to show opportunity to commit the offense charged, 99 evidence of the defendant's "other crimes" may not have to be similar to the offense with which the accused is charged in order to be admissible.

§ 426 --To show opportunity, or common scheme or plan [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

In prosecution for conspiracy to commit armed robberies arising out of defendants' gun sales, evidence of defendant's earlier illegal gun sales to indicted persons was admissible since it showed that he had opportunity because he possessed large number of uninventoried guns that could be sold to felons without being traced or detected, and showed his common scheme to sell firearms to prohibited persons. United States v Crouch (1995, CA8 Mo) 46 F3d 871, reh den (1995, CA8 Mo) 1995 US App LEXIS 5393 and reh, en banc, den sub nom United States v Mandacina (1995, CA8) 1995 US App LEXIS 6328.

The trial court did not err in a first-degree murder prosecution involving poisoning by allowing the State to introduce testimony from a registered nurse who had cared for the victim during his final illness concerning medical techniques and medical equipment used to treat the victim. Although defendant contended that the sole purpose of the testimony was to generate sympathy for the victim's family, the testimony was probative to show that defendant had access to the victim in the hospital, that a correlation existed between defendant's feeding the victim and the onset of his symptoms, that the victim manifested symptoms associated with multiple system failure incident to arsenic poisoning, that the victim could swallow food notwithstanding the tubes, that arsenic could have been introduced into the victim's body via the feeding tubes, and that the victim suffered inordinate pain over an extended period of time. The probative value of the testimony outweighed any unfair prejudice to defendant; furthermore, the record discloses that similar evidence from other witnesses was admitted without objection. State v Moore (1994) 335 NC 567, 440 SE2d 797.

In a prosecution of defendant for first- degree statutory rape of his daughter, the trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to suppress evidence of defendant's molestation of another daughter several years earlier, since the daughter's testimony was sufficiently similar to that recounted by the victim concerning the manner of abuse to show a common plan or scheme, and remoteness in time did not make the daughter's testimony inadmissible because it was due to defendant's having almost no access to the daughters of his first marriage following his divorce. State v Jacob (1994) 113 NC App 605, 439 SE2d 812.

Many cases admitting evidence under the terms of Rule 404(b) recapitulate all, or several, of the purposes listed in the rule as the basis for such ruling, 1 and a trial court's failure specifically to identify the purpose for which evidence of prior bad acts was offered and admitted is not necessarily reversible error. 2 But the preferred method, especially in the federal courts, is for the prosecution, which bears the burden of showing how the proffered evidence is relevant to one or more issues in the case, to articulate precisely the evidentiary hypothesis by which a fact of consequence may be inferred from the evidence of other acts, 3 and for the trial court to specifically identify the purpose for which such evidence is admitted, rather than merely to provide a broad statement invoking or restating Federal Rules of Evidence 404(b). 4

◆ Practice guide: A specific articulation of the relevant purpose and specific inferences to be drawn from each proffer of evidence of other acts will enable the trial court to more accurately make an informed decision and weigh the probative value of such evidence against the risks of prejudice specified in Federal Rules of Evidence 403. In addition, specific and clear reasoning and findings in the trial record will greatly aid an appellate court in its review of these evidentiary issues. 5

Evidence that defendant had committed shootings elsewhere as to which charges were pending and had prior experience with guns as well, elicited on cross- examination and rebuttal to impeach defendant's testimony that he had no significant familiarity with guns and had never possessed any elsewhere, was properly admitted. United States v Beverly (1993, CA2 NY) 5 F3d 633, 38 Fed Rules Evid Serv 94.

Evidence of pushboat crew's prior convictions and instances of drug and alcohol use were properly admitted in suit arising out of collision between barges being pushed and rocks protecting natural gas pipeline to show that vessel owner was negligent in hiring crew. Brunet v United Gas Pipeline Co. (1994, CA5 La) 15 F3d 500.

District court did not err in refusing request for instruction limiting use of extrinsic offense evidence for purposes of impeachment since it was substantially covered in charge given which instructed jury on weighing testimony of witnesses and that defendant was not on trial for any act or conduct not alleged in indictment. United States v Jensen (1994, CA5 Tex) 41 F3d 946, reh, en banc, den (1995, CA5 Tex) 1995 US App LEXIS 1414.

Prosecutor was not required to give notice of his intention to use other-acts evidence to impeach defendant charged with various bribery and extortion offenses since prosecution's cross-examination questions concerning alleged FEC investigation of defendant's involvement in political candidate's campaign, alleged hiring of lawyer to pay off foreign officials, FBI investigation of alleged bankruptcy fraud, and whether defendant had skimmed money from his bankrupt restaurant and fled from Texas to Florida were probative of defendant's character for truthfulness and permissible under Rule 608(b). United States v Tomblin (1994, CA5 Tex) 42 F3d 263, op withdrawn, substituted op, reh, en banc, den (1995, CA5 Tex) 46 F3d 1369.

In FDIC's lawsuit against defunct bank's fidelity bond insurer for recovery in connection with chief loan officer's fraud in connection with loan transactions, evidence of loan which officer made while president of another bank, which was used to catch up on loan for which he and another person were personally liable, was properly admitted "other acts" evidence of intent, plan, knowledge, and absence of mistake. FDIC v Fidelity & Deposit Co. (1995, CA5 La) 45 F3d 969, reh den (1995, CA5 La) 1995 US App LEXIS 7924.

Evidence of defendant's prior court proceedings establishing that he was aware that he no longer had title to two farms which he had lost through foreclosure, though he claimed ownership of them on his tax returns, was admissible in trial on charges of filing false tax returns since they were inextricably tied to elements of filing false tax returns, hence did not have to be analyzed as other acts evidence. United States v Hilgeford (1993, CA7 Ind) 7 F3d 1340.

Evidence that defendant charged with various firearms offenses possessed shotgun on numerous dates before date charged in indictment bore directly on question of his possession of gun on date charged, particularly in light of defense theory that defendant only momentarily possessed gun on that date for purpose of turning it over to police officer. United States v Elder (1994, CA7 Ill) 16 F3d 733.

Evidence of narcotics defendant's previous arrest and conviction for possession of cocaine was relevant to establish defendant's state of mind, which was at issue during trial. United States v Hazelett (1996, CA8 Mo) 80 F3d 280, reh, en banc, den (1996, CA8) 1996 US App LEXIS 15402.

Defendant's two previous convictions for battery on law enforcement officer should not have been admitted since government failed to articulate specific evidentiary purpose, but admission was harmless in light of substantial evidence of defendant's guilt of assault on federal officer and possession of firearm during violent crime. United States v Birch (1994, CA10 Kan) 39 F3d 1089.

Evidence that senior associate attorney fired from law firm allegedly because of difficulty in meeting deadlines and getting along with fellow employees had had similar problems in law firm in which she had been previously employed was not admissible under Rule 404 because it was admitted for purpose specifically prohibited by that rule, i.e., to prove that plaintiff acted in conformity therewith, nor was it admissible as impeachment evidence under Rule 608 since it was irrelevant to her character for truthfulness or untruthfulness, though admission was harmless since defendant law firm produced substantial evidence that her discharge was for legitimate reasons and plaintiff's evidence was insufficient to demonstrate that it was pretext for sex discrimination. Neuren v Adduci, Mastriani, Meeks & Schill (1995, App DC) 43 F3d 1507, 66 BNA FEP Cas 1533, 41 Fed Rules Evid Serv 1.

In prosecution for molestation of 11- year-old child, who was 15 years old at time of trial, trial court did not err in refusing to admit evidence concerning prior victimization of victim and third girl, proffered by defendant to impeach their credibility concerning his acts against them. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in ruling that evidence that victim had been previously molested was not relevant to present molestation charge. Defendant did not show that it tended to undermine credibility, the purpose for which it was offered. Witness was not child of tender years who might be confused and base her testimony on what she learned from prior acts upon her by someone else. Probability of witness in present case confusing two events, considering her age, would be far weaker; conversely, probability of her having general knowledge of such matters, not based on prior incident, would be far greater. Thus evidence of prior molestation did not fall within exception of inadmissibility as matter of law. Wilson v Sate (1993) 210 Ga App 705, 436 SE2d 732, 93 Fulton County D R 3685, reconsideration den (Oct 29, 1993).

People did not improperly introduce evidence of prior uncharged crime through testimony by rape victim relating comment made by codefendant to defendant and other, telling them not to "start at it again" and that he did not want them "to start shooting again," since comment, to extent it was reference to actual gun shooting incident, was relevant on issue of forcible compulsion inasmuch as victim could have feared that defendants were armed. People v Richardson (1992, 2d Dept) 182 AD2d 721, 582 NYS2d 450, app gr 79 NY2d 1053, 584 NYS2d 1021, 596 NE2d 419 and affd 81 NY2d 303, 598 NYS2d 167, 614 NE2d 730.

An F.B.I. agent's testimony about the circumstances surrounding a murder committed by defendant in Alabama, and his testimony about the circumstances surrounding a kidnapping by defendant in Oregon as related to him by the victim, was relevant to sentencing defendant for two murders in this state and was properly admitted in this capital sentencing proceeding to support the prior conviction of a violent felony aggravating circumstance, notwithstanding the State had offered certified copies of court documents to establish defendant's convictions for those crimes, defendant had not presented evidence of his good character, and the testimony about the kidnapping was hearsay. State v Rose (1994) 339 NC 172, 451 SE2d 211.

In a murder prosecution, a witness was properly permitted to testify that the defendant attempted to rape her several hours after the murder and that he told her that she would get the same thing the murder victim got if she opened her mouth, notwithstanding that the testimony implicated the defendant in an uncharged crime, since the testimony completed the story of the murder by demonstrating the history and natural development of the facts surrounding the defendant's movements on the day of the murder. Commonwealth v Simmons (1995, Pa) 662 A2d 621, application gr (Pa) 1995 Pa LEXIS 1336 and petition for certiorari filed (Dec 14, 1995).

In a murder prosecution, the court properly permitted the introduction of testimony by a witness that the defendant stated that he had just gotten out of jail and was going to kill the first white man he saw since such testimony was admissible as part of the natural sequence of events which occurred shortly before the murder which formed the history of the case. Commonwealth v Williams (1995, Pa) 660 A2d 1316, cert den (US) 1996 US LEXIS 135.

In prosecution for conspiracy to file false income tax returns, District Court did not err in admitting testimony relating to a tax refund scheme alleged to have occurred prior to that for which defendant was prosecuted, notwithstanding that the court did not articulate on the record the Rule 404(b) grounds it was employing, since the purpose for admitting other acts testimony was apparent from the record to explain how the conspiracy started and established identity and interest, as well as intent and motive. United States v Orr (CA10 Okla) 864 F2d 1505, 89-1 USTC ¶ 9220, 27 Fed Rules Evid Serv 385, 63 AFTR 2d 89-518.

A trial court should not admit evidence of other acts under FRE 404(b) based on a general recitation of this rule, that is, on the issue of "motive, opportunity, intent, preparation, plan, knowledge, identity, or absence of mistake or accident," without specifying the purposes for which the evidence is admitted. The jury should not be left to decide what these various terms might mean in the context of the case and whether the evidence fits into any such category, since in order to accomplish this assignment properly, the jury would have to study an evidence test. United States v Shackleford (CA7 Ill) 738 F2d 776, 15 Fed Rules Evid Serv 1550 (disapproved on other grounds by Huddleston v United States, 485 US 681, 99 L Ed 2d 771, 108 S Ct 1496, 25 Fed Rules Evid Serv 1) as stated in United States v Manganellis (CA7 Wis) 864 F2d 528, 27 Fed Rules Evid Serv 1063.

Evidence of prior acts is admissible if, entirely apart from the matter of "propensity," it has a tendency to make the existence of an element of the crime charged more probable than it would be without such evidence. 6 Such evidence may also be admissible as relevant to the elements of the offense, irrespective of the analysis under Rule 404(b). 7

Evidence of other crimes, wrongs, or acts held admissible to prove an essential element of the offense charged has included—

—evidence that defendant sold narcotics to an undercover agent less than two months prior to the instant act, as probative of defendant's possession of a controlled substance with intent to distribute. 8

—evidence of cocaine paraphernalia to prove defendant's continued involvement in a conspiracy. 9

—evidence of defendant's postindictment attempt to make an illegal purchase of drugs, to prove predisposition in a prosecution for conspiracy to distribute heroin. 10

—evidence of prior convictions for distribution of narcotics in a prosecution for distribution of cocaine, even though the acts involved different drugs, since the fact that they all involved distribution made them relevant to issue of predisposition. 11

—evidence of drugs, guns, cash and other items seized outside the time frame of the conspiracy alleged in an indictment, as relevant to existence of and defendants' participation in the conspiracy charged. 12

—evidence of a motorist's intoxication, since it was highly probative of the cause of the motorist's loss of control of the vehicle, even though the case was a product liability case against an automobile manufacturer and the evidence had potential prejudicial effect. 13

—defendant's recorded statement to an undercover officer that he falsified a receipt in order to conceal his ownership and possession of a fully automatic machinegun in 1984, which had been the subject of a state court prosecution for illegally possessing a machinegun, as probative of the issue of possession of a firearm. 14

—testimony as to a defendant's income from bookmaking and chicken sales offered not to prove the defendant's character, but rather to prove that he received income he was required to report but did not report, 15 a requisite to his conviction under the Internal Revenue Code. 16

—evidence of prior acts of misconduct to rebut a union official's claim that he never received labor movement funds for purposes other than labor movement activity, in a prosecution for embezzlement. 17

—a criminal transcript containing information of a prior felony conviction in a case charging that the defendant falsely signed a statement with knowledge of the felony conviction. 18

—testimony as to the defendant's confession to stealing weapons, as necessary to prove receipt, an essential element of the crime charged. 19

—evidence of defendant's membership in a street gang, in a prosecution for knowing possession of a firearm by a convicted felon, since hostility between street gangs explained defendant's actions and the presence of guns in his car. 20

—testimony of other passengers in an airplane passenger's suit for injuries suffered during emergency evacuation procedures, as relevant in that it served to confirm the correctness of plaintiff's impression about the flight attendant's propensity to push her. 21

—testimony that a witness observed a knife in the defendant's possession on earlier occasions, in a prosecution for possessing a knife in prison. 22

—payroll records showing that contrary to his testimony, a witness did not work with the defendant at the time he claimed to have seen the defendant engage in a prior criminal act, as indicative of whether a fact in issue did or did not exist. 23

In a prosecution for possession of an unregistered firearm, evidence of the defendant's prior conviction is inadmissible where the fact of the conviction does not make the defendant guilty of a separate crime, but merely subjects the defendant to an enhanced penalty. 24

Case authorities:

Evidence of defendant's prior firearm conviction was properly admitted to rebut his direct testimony that he did not have firearm on night in question and had never had gun in all his life, even if it was not admissible under Rule 609 to impeach his character for truthfulness, since it was not offered for that purpose. United States v Norton (1994, CA1 Mass) 26 F3d 240.

Evidence of prior robbery was properly admitted in order to establish ownership of defaced firearm recovered during armed postal robbery presently charged. United States v Gelzer (1995, CA2 NY) 50 F3d 1133, 41 Fed Rules Evid Serv 1038.

Rule barred admission of taped conversations between defendant and other persons involved in drug conspiracy not charged in case since defendant's defense did not assert lack of opportunity, preparation and plan were not in issue, nor were knowledge and absence of mistake and evidence did not suggest such issues; only identity and intent were arguably proper purposes, and since defendant did not concede that he was party to taped conversation, playing tape was most unfairly prejudicial means of proving identity, and was likewise unfairly prejudicial to prove intent. United States v Merriweather (1996, CA6 Ohio) 78 F3d 1070, 43 Fed Rules Evid Serv 789.

Evidence of disciplinary actions employer took against two other employees who were guilty of arguably similar misconduct to plaintiff's was relevant to plaintiff's claim that employer breached its duty to progressively discipline him before termination and to discipline similarly situated employees uniformly. Gomez v Martin Marietta Corp. (1995, CA10 Colo) 50 F3d 1511, 67 BNA FEP Cas 537.

In prosecution for child molestation of ice-cream-truck driver who paid two 9-year-old girls to let him photograph them in their underwear, trial court properly admitted evidence that defendant had previously molested his stepdaughter, where, in crimes involving sexual deviancy, proof of similar acts near in time to offense charged may be admitted as evidence of accused's propensity to commit such acts, and particular acts involved in molestation of stepdaughter and of two girls were very similar. State v Varela (1993, App) 178 Ariz 319, 873 P2d 657, 149 Ariz Adv Rep 22.

Trial court in murder prosecution did not err in admitting evidence of defendant's escape where, at time of escape, defendant had been charged only with theft by receiving; theft by receiving charge was linked to murder charge, and escape from incarceration was admissible as circumstantial evidence of guilt. Clay v State (1994) 318 Ark 122, 883 SW2d 822.

In prosecution for assault of prison inmate by other inmates, evidence that defendant was lieutenant in prison gang was admissible to show why other inmates participated in attack and to contradict defendant's assertion that he was not involved in attack. State v Darden (1995, Conn App) 666 A2d 831, app gr, in part 236 Conn 905, 670 A2d 1306.

The trial court did not abuse its discretion when trying defendant for the first-degree murder of his wife by allowing the prosecutor to question defendant about his failure to provide financial support to his children following his wife's death where the State sought on cross-examination to rebut the defendant's testimony regarding his loving relationship with his wife and children. Evidence tending to show that the defendant did not support his children and did not send them gifts following his wife's death tended to shed light upon the circumstances surrounding the shooting and was relevant and admissible; furthermore, defendant was not unfairly prejudiced by the introduction of the evidence and similar evidence was already before the jury without objection in the form of testimony that defendant failed to act responsibly to support his family prior to the shooting. GS § 8C-1, Rules 401, 403. State v Collins (1994) 335 NC 729, 440 SE2d 559.

The trial court in a murder prosecution did not err in admitting evidence that defendant was arrested for carrying a concealed weapon in connection with the seizure of the handgun used to commit the murder, since the evidence was relevant to show defendant's possession of the murder weapon and the circumstances under which the police obtained this weapon. State v Williams (1995) 341 NC 1, 459 SE2d 208.

In prosecution for sexual assault on child under age 13, based on defendant's acts of sexual penetration of his daughter when she was between 11 and 13 years of age, trial court did not err in admitting testimony as to uncharged sexual crimes committed by defendant against his daughter beginning at approximately age 4, where evidence clearly fit exception for uncharged sexual misconduct to show lustful disposition or sexual propensity pertinent to proof of prior incestuous relations, and acts were interwoven with charged acts. State v Toole (1994, RI) 640 A2d 965, summary op at (RI) 15 R.I.L.W. 95.

§ 429 --Issue of reasonable force, in civil rights actions

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

A plaintiff's record of past criminal offenses may be relevant and admissible in an action for damages based on alleged excessive force used by police officers in the course of the plaintiff's arrest ²⁵ or by prison officers against an inmate ²⁶ since such evidence is relevant to the reasonableness of the defendants' response to the situation in question. ²⁷

Not all courts admit such evidence, however, some finding that its prejudicial effect tends to outweigh its probative value. 28 Furthermore, such evidence is not admissible to show a general propensity toward violent behavior on the part of the plaintiff which led the defendants to act abusively toward the plaintiff. 29

In a civil rights action 30 alleging unreasonable force in arresting the plaintiff, extrinsic evidence of other acts may also be admissible on the issue of the defendant's intent in exercising force against the plaintiff. 31

In civil rights suits alleging that police supervisors did not exert proper supervisory control over officers, evidence of civilian complaints against a particular police officer is admissible, where such evidence was admitted not against the police officer, but rather for the purpose of establishing supervisory liability. 32 But it has also been stated, in a civil rights action against police officers and a municipality, that permitting the jury to consider complaints and accounts of misconduct contained in the personnel files of the defendant officers presents a grave danger of unfair prejudice and is forbidden by Federal Rules of Evidence 404(b), even when admitted only for the purpose of establishing a pattern or practice by the municipality of permitting such conduct. 33 And prior complaints against a police officer must be excluded in an arrestee's civil rights suits where the officer had been exonerated on all charges in prior complaints except one involving abusive language and there was no pattern to connect varied conduct alleged in complaints to allegations of physical abuse and intimidation made by the plaintiff. 34

§ 430 To corroborate prosecution witnesses

View Entire Section

Evidence of a defendant's other crimes, wrongs, or acts may be admissible to corroborate the testimony of prosecution witnesses. 35 Such evidence is admissible to corroborate crucial prosecution testimony, assuming that the probative value of the evidence is not outweighed by unfair prejudice. However, to avoid potential prosecutorial abuse, the proponent of the evidence must demonstrate a close relationship between the proffered evidence and the evidence to be corroborated. 36

Other crimes evidence is admissible only for corroborative purposes if the corroboration is direct and the matter corroborated is significant. 37 Significant corroborating evidence is usually understood to mean important—as distinct from trivial—evidence in a trial, such as where the evidence reinforces the testimony of the key government witness.

38 In addition, the probative value of the evidence may not be substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. 39

§ 431 To rebut character defense

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Where a defendant in a criminal case by his or her own testimony and that of others has deliberately sought as the primary means of defense to depict himself or herself as one whose essential philosophy and habitual conduct in life is completely at odds with the possession of a state of mind requisite to guilt of the offense charged, the defendant may be considered in effect to have forfeited the protection of the first sentence of Rule 404(b), which provides that evidence of other crimes, wrongs, or acts is not admissible to prove the character of a person in order to show that the person acted in conformity therewith, 40 and to have opened the door to evidence of other crimes, wrongs or acts. 41 Under such circumstances, rebuttal testimony showing prior crimes may well be the only effective way to rebut evidence designed generally to plant in the jury's mind a reasonable doubt that a person such as the defendant could have possessed the culpability of mind requisite to commit the crime charged. 42 But it has been held that even if the testimony of one accused of sexual abuse that he had no prior criminal convictions, that he was a Christian and that he had a long and happy marriage, opened the general issue of his character in the same way as if he had called a character witness, it did not justify admitting extrinsic evidence of specific instances of prior misconduct, on the bases that the particular defendant had not testified on direct that he had never touched other children, and bad character was not a significant element of the offense charged. 43

§ 431 ----To rebut character defense [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Fact that defendant had stipulated to fact of predicate conviction for felon in possession of firearm offense did not render parole supervisor's testimony inadmissible where government carefully tailored testimony to avoid any impermissible reference to predicate offense, as well as to avoid any information which related to defendant's character or propensity toward criminal behavior. United States v Palmer (1994, CA5 Tex) 37 F3d 1080.

The trial court did not err in a first- degree murder sentencing hearing by admitting testimony from defendant's probation officer that defendant was a fair probationer but consistently denied having a drug or alcohol problem despite the offer of assistance in making drug treatment available, and testimony that in the past defendant had punched his girlfriend and hit her with brass knuckles, cursed and spit on his girlfriend and the mother of his children and fought with officers who came to arrest him, and refused to enter a room and haggled with a courtroom deputy while in custody. This evidence was admissible to counter defendant's evidence of his good character traits, to rebut the mitigating circumstances submitted regarding defendant's age, his being a loving father and his good adaption to prison life, and to rebut the mitigating circumstance relating to defendant's "misuse or abuse" of drugs. State v Carter (1994) 338 NC 569, 451 SE2d 157.

§ 432 To rebut entrapment defense; claim of self-defense

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Evidence of similar unlawful acts of defendant, other than acts for which defendant is on trial, is ordinarily admissible to rebut the defense of entrapment, 44 though there is some authority to the contrary. 45 A defense of entrapment may be countered by evidence of other crimes and wrongs in order to show the defendant's predisposition to commit the offense or offenses charged. 46 Such evidence of other offenses may be admitted as part of prosecution's case in chief, if it appears that defendant will rely on a claim of entrapment. 47 The use of such evidence to show predisposition is permitted only when the other crimes are of the same nature as those charged. 48 This method is often used in drug prosecutions. 49 However, such evidence is not admissible to prove a predisposition to commit criminal acts generally, since that would be proof of bad character for the purpose of showing that the defendant acted in accordance with such general criminal propensity in committing the charged offenses. 50

A court properly excluded evidence that codefendant had engaged in extortionate activities in unrelated incidents where it was irrelevant to defendants' defense of entrapment, since entrapment is concerned with the particular defendant's intent. 51

Defendant's prior practice of carrying a knife was admissible in a homicide prosecution where defendant claimed self-defense. 52

§ 432 ----To rebut entrapment defense; claim of self-defense [SUPPLEMENT]

When a defendant relies on an insanity defense, evidence of prior similar criminal acts may be relevant to an evaluation of that defense by the trier of fact. 53 Previous and subsequent bad acts of almost any character are admissible to rebut such a defense if they are probative of the defendant's mental ability to organize and orchestrate and of the defendant's awareness of the world surrounding him. 54

§ 434 To show bias or interest of witness

In criminal cases, evidence may be admissible under Federal Rules of Evidence 404(b) to show the bias or interest of a witness so long as the bias is not a collateral issue and so long as the evidence does not become inadmissible evidence of the witness' character. The court must carefully balance probative value against prejudicial effect, and may use a voir dire procedure to substantiate allegations before allowing possible prejudicial material to be brought before the jury. 55 Evidence of extrinsic acts cannot be admitted against a party to show bias for a purpose other than impeachment; for example, it cannot be admitted to show party's "bias" against authority, since this is analogous to an inference that the party acted in conformity with prior bad acts. 56

§ 434 ----To show bias or interest of witness [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

There was no error in a first- degree murder prosecution arising from an armed robbery in the exclusion of evidence that an accomplice who testified against defendant had held the gun in a previous robbery. Although defendant contended that this evidence was admissible to show bias, if the witness had shot the victim in this case, defendant would be guilty of felony murder, the crime of which he was convicted. State v Grace (1995) 341 NC 640, 461 SE2d 330.

(2). To Establish Motive [435, 436]

§ 435 Generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

It has long been recognized that evidence is admissible in a criminal prosecution of other criminal acts committed by the accused which shows or tends to show his motive for the commission of the offense charged. 57 It has also been admitted in certain other litigation, such as between a fire insurance company and a policyholder where such evidence would provide a motive for the insured to set fire to his own property. 58

Evidence of other crimes, wrongs, or acts which has been ruled admissible on the issue of motive also includes—

—evidence of drug use or transactions. 59

—evidence of the payment of bribes not included in the indictment for bribery, as probative of defendant's purpose in accepting money from writ servers. 60

—evidence of plaintiff's and other union members' mistreatment by other locals, in a union member's suit alleging that a union local unlawfully delayed his transfer into that local and mistreated him once he became a member. 61

—evidence of a 17-year-old felony conviction and an outstanding arrest warrant, in a prosecution for pointing a gun at FBI agents in an effort to escape, to show that accused could not afford to be caught with a gun in his possession. 62

—evidence of the defendant's fraudulent activities with one company, in a prosecution for fraudulent activities with another company. 63

—evidence that defendant had overdrawn bank account, since proof that he is living beyond his means has probative value in case involving a crime resulting in financial gain. 64

—evidence of sexual assault upon a female victim during the period of abduction to show the kidnapper's motive and intent. 65

—evidence of the defendant's participation in prior homicides, where the defendant was charged with murdering a fellow inmate to keep him from implicating the defendant with involvement in the prior homicides. 66

Under Rule 404, prior wrongful acts must establish motive to commit the particular crime charged and not simply a propensity to engage in criminal activity. 67 Evidence of other bad acts is not automatically admissible simply because defendant argues at trial that there was no motive to commit the crime. 68 Hence, it is an insufficient argument for the prosecution to say that, because the defendant successfully committed a similar act earlier, he was motivated or encouraged to have committed the act charged in the instant case, since this is an argument that relies on propensity, an impermissible basis for admitting extrinsic evidence. 69 A mere showing that a defendant entered into bankruptcy two years previous to a charged crime is irrelevant to a showing that he had a motivation to steal or embezzle. 70

§ 435 ----Generally [SUPPLEMENT]

Practice Aids: Admissibility of evidence of prior physical acts of spousal abuse committed by defendant accused of murdering spouse or former spouse. 24 ALR5th 465.

Case authorities:

Evidence that defendant charged with fraud was incarcerated at time he met with witness and convinced witness to place defendant's son on his payroll as "no-show" employee so that son would have health insurance, was admissible to prove defendant's motive in securing health insurance for his son because of his incarceration. United States v Mauro (1996, CA2 NY) 80 F3d 73.

Testimony of witness whom extortion defendant had previously attempted to extort was properly admitted to prove motive, intent and plan. United States v Bengali (1993, CA4 Va) 11 F3d 1207, petition for certiorari filed (Mar 25, 1994).

In prosecution of coowners of savings and loan association for various offenses in connection with S&L, evidence that defendants had received consulting fee two years prior to offenses alleged was properly admitted to impeach one defendant's direct testimony that he had never improperly profited from any financial transactions involving S&L and as prior bad act evidence of defendant's motive and intent with respect to crimes charged. United States v Holley (1994, CA5 Tex) 23 F3d 902, reh, en banc, den (1994, CA5 Tex) 1994 US App LEXIS 19842.

Bank robbery defendant's prior drug use was not admissible to prove motive; motive was not material issue, facts were not also relevant to identity which is indisputably in issue in robbery case, rather government simply asked jury to draw raw inference about defendant's motive from fact that he used drugs. United States v Sutton (1994, CA8 Minn) 41 F3d 1257.

Evidence regarding prison gang was admissible on issue of motive since it was necessary to explain why defendant would kill stranger, i.e., to be accepted into gang, and to show how and why other inmates assisted him in obtaining weapon. United States v Santiago (1995, CA9 Cal) 46 F3d 885, 95 CDOS 598, 95 Daily Journal DAR 1084.

Evidence of outstanding judgments against defendant convicted of bank fraud and making false statements on loan application was admissible as probative of defendant's motive to lie about his identity because people against whom large and still enforceable judgments are outstanding are unlikely to be extended credit. United States v Key (1996, CA11 Ga) 76 F3d 350, 9 FLW Fed C 902.

Evidence of defendant's prior sexual misconduct involving his natural daughter, committed 7 to 9 years before charged offenses, was admissible in prosecution for sexual abuse involving defendant's two stepdaughters, to prove motive, and where there was resemblance in manner of abuse. Ex parte Register (1994, Ala) 640 So 2d 12.

Trial court in murder prosecution properly admitted evidence that defendant was member of youth gang, where status as gang member was relevant to motive for apparently unprovoked homicide, and where trial court instructed jury to consider evidence of gang membership only as to motive. State v Toney (1993) 253 Kan 651, 862 P2d 350.

Evidence of prior uncharged acts of sexual misconduct involving child victim was admissible in prosecution for sexual abuse, to show defendant's motive for committing charged acts, that is, satisfaction of sexual desire for victim. State v Dudley (1994, Mo App) 880 SW2d 580.

The trial court in a first-degree murder prosecution did not err by the admission of evidence of the killing of a member of defendant's "family" called the Pimps where it is clear that such killing, if not the principal reason for the killing of the victim in the present case, was a central and critical fact in the explanation of the sequence of events and motive for the murder in the present case. State v Mason (1994) 337 NC 165, 446 SE2d 58.

The trial court did not err in a prosecution in which defendant was convicted of first-degree murder, first-degree rape, and first-degree sexual offense by admitting the testimony of defendant's ex-wife that defendant had anally assaulted her during their marriage where, although there are dissimilarities, the similarities tend to support a reasonable inference that defendant committed the assaults on both women and the probative value of the similarities was sufficient to outweigh the risk of unfair prejudice to defendant. State v Moseley (1994) 338 NC 1, 449 SE2d 412.

The trial court did not err in a prosecution in which defendant was convicted of first-degree murder, first-degree rape, and first-degree sexual offense by admitting testimony of defendant's prior sexual assault on another victim where the trial court found from the uncontradicted evidence that the attacks bore several similarities; there were sufficient similarities to support a reasonable inference that the same persons committed both acts; the occurrences were not so temporally remote as to diminish the probative value of the evidence; the admission of prior acts tending to show motive is clearly supported by G.S. § 8C-1, Rule 404(b) and our case law; and this testimony showed that defendant knew from his past experience that his crime would be reported and that he would suffer the consequences if he left his victim alive. State v Moseley (1994) 338 NC 1, 449 SE2d 412.

Chain-of-events evidence about defendant's escape from an Alabama prison and thefts he committed after his escape and before he committed the two murders at issue was properly admitted to establish defendant's intent and motive for the murders, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion by finding this evidence more probative than prejudicial. G.S. § 8C-1, Rules 403 and 404(b). State v Rose (1994) 339 NC 172, 451 SE2d 211.

The trial court did not err in a first- degree murder prosecution in excluding expert testimony concerning the victim's mental condition. Although defendant contended that the excluded evidence consisted of expert testimony that the victim suffered from a manic-depressive illness which caused various problems, including irritability and hostility, that this was admissible to corroborate defendant's claim that he killed the victim after she resisted his effort to end their relationship and became assaultive, and that the excluded testimony was thus relevant to disprove premeditation and deliberation, the undisputed evidence, including evidence that the victim was attempting to withdraw from a confrontation with defendant at the time of the murder, shows premeditation and deliberation on the part of defendant regardless of the victim's mental condition. The victim's actions in this case, regardless of mental condition, did not constitute sufficient provocation to negate premeditation and deliberation on the part of defendant. State v Hightower (1995) 340 NC 735, 459 SE2d 739.

The trial court did not err in the prosecution of defendant for the noncapital first-degree murder of her four year old stepson by admitting evidence that her husband, an insurance agent, amended the victim's life insurance policy six days before his death to designate defendant as a co-beneficiary. Evidence of motive is relevant when it has a tendency to show that the defendant committed the crime at issue. The extent of defendant's knowledge about this insurance policy impacted only on the weight to be accorded the evidence. State v White (1995) 340 NC 264, 457 SE2d 841.

Testimony by a witness that defendant had mentioned robbing a bank to get rent money did not tend to show that defendant had actually robbed a bank or had committed any other crime or wrong, but even if it did, such testimony would have been admissible to show defendant's motive and intent to commit the crimes of robbery and murder of his landlord. GS § 8C-1, Rule 404(b). State v Thibodeaux (1995) 341 NC 53, 459 SE2d 501.

There was no prejudice in a first- degree murder prosecution where the trial court admitted court files relating to defendant's prior conviction for assault. The files were admitted for the nonhearsay purpose of showing motive, intent and plan and witnesses testified that defendant broke into the victim's home and attacked her, that the victim prosecuted the defendant for the assault and trespass, that the defendant harassed and threatened the victim, and that the victim believed that the defendant was going to kill her. The files added little, if anything, to the State's case. State v Alston (1995) 341 NC 198, 461 SE2d 687.

Evidence of defendant's shooting of his former girlfriend at the time of their breakup and his conviction and sentence arising out of that shooting was admissible to show the chain of events that led to defendant's murder of his former girlfriend's new boyfriend just three months after their breakup and ten days after defendant's release from jail for the events surrounding their breakup. State v Ratliff (1995) 341 NC 610, 461 SE2d 325.

The trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting evidence regarding defendant's prior acts in engaging in excessive conduct with other co-employees and his reputation created thereby in an action for damages from an injury suffered during a movie stunt where plaintiff alleged willful and wanton, negligent and reckless conduct by defendant. The evidence was probative of defendant's motive, intent and the absence of mistake and was admissible under N.C.G.S. § 8C-1, Rule 404(b). Pinckney v Van Damme (1994) 116 NC App 139, 447 SE2d 825.

In prosecution for sexual assault, trial court erred by admitting evidence of uncharged prior sexual assault of different victim, where although state contended that because defendant was motivated by sexual desire in assaulting prior victim, it was more probable that he was similarly motivated in present case, this contention was no more than impermissible propensity analysis and although state argued that evidence was admissible to show common scheme, state's theory foundered upon passage of over 4 years between two assaults. State v Winter (1994, Vt) 648 A2d 624.

§ 436 Evidence of drug-related crimes

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Evidence of defendant's past drug activities have often been held admissible on the issue of motive. 71 In particular, evidence that a defendant attempted to purchase heroin shortly after a robbery, 72 or that the defendant was addicted to drugs, 73 has been found admissible to show the defendant's motive in a prosecution for robbery. Similarly, evidence that defendant possessed illegal drugs at time of his arrest could establish a motive for possessing a weapon, for which he was being prosecuted. 74

But evidence of drug use or addiction is admissible to prove motive only when there exists some affirmative link between the crime and the use or addiction. To admit such testimony without showing some affirmative link between a crime and narcotics would show only that the accused was a criminal generally. 75 Hence, in a prosecution for theft, it was error to admit testimony as to the defendant's heroin addiction in an attempt by the prosecution to show a motive for a robbery, where there was an absence of any affirmative link between the robbery and the defendant's alleged heroin addiction. 76

Case authorities:

Securities fraud defendant's Form 10-K annual report disclosing company's provision of terms of net 30 days for most products, extension to 90 days at discretion of management, and return for credit under certain circumstances was properly excluded as evidence of subsequent remedial measures since potential prejudice was great given hotly contested issue whether defendant granted unconditional right to return and extraordinary credit terms to its distributors. Malone v Microdyne Corp. (1994, CA4 Va) 26 F3d 471, CCH Fed Secur L Rep ¶ 98237.

Evidence of bank robbery defendant's drug use was erroneously admitted since there was no evidence of defendant's financial need to supply motive for bank robbery. United States v Madden (1994, CA4 Md) 38 F3d 747.

Evidence of defendant's personal marijuana and cocaine use was admissible as proof of his motive for participation in charged conspiracies to distribute marijuana. United States v Boyd (1995, CA4 Md) 53 F3d 631.

Evidence that defendant had previously been convicted for possessing small amount of cocaine and weapon was properly admitted to show potential motive for later cocaine distribution and to show that he used firearm during drug trafficking crime. United States v Powell (1994, CA8 Mo) 39 F3d 894.

§ 437 Generally

Evidence of similar acts, wrongs, or crimes is frequently highly probative on issues of intent, 77 and evidence of a prior conviction for the same offense as that charged is clearly countenanced by Federal Rules of Evidence 404(b) as evidence admissible to show a defendant's intent. 78 When an extrinsic offense is offered to show that the defendant's intent was to commit the offense charged, the relevancy of the extrinsic offense derives from the defendant's possessing the same state of mind in the perpetration of both the extrinsic and charged offenses. 79

The courts have reasoned that if a criminal defendant acts similarly in similar situations, the defendant probably harbors the same intent in each instance, and that prior conduct may be relevant circumstantial evidence of the defendant's most recent intent. The inference to be drawn is not that the defendant is disposed to commit such acts; rather, the inference to be drawn is that, in light of the first event, the defendant, at the time of the second event, must have had the intent attributed to him or her by the prosecution. 80

Intent may be inferred from subsequent as well as prior acts. 81 That one has thought in a particular illegal way over a period of time is evidence that one's thought patterns had already been so developed and were so operating on another previous occasion. 82

The scope of the court's discretion under Rule 404(b) does not permit the introduction of every prior similar act that may contribute in some manner to a showing of intent. 83 It has long been the rule that where one is charged with a criminal act that may be innocent or guilty according to the intent with which it was done, the acts, conduct, or statements of the accused on other occasions may be proved in order to show such intent, but that such proof cannot be extended to acts, conduct, or statements of the accused that do not naturally or necessarily bear on the issue to be established. 84 In many instances where a prior criminal act has some relevance to the question of intent, evidence concerning the act must nevertheless be excluded because the probative value is substantially outweighed by unfair prejudice to the defendant resulting from the fact that the evidence tends to portray the defendant as a "bad" person and thus hinders the defendant's defense on other issues. Thus, for example, where there exists a genuinely disputed question concerning the identity of the person who committed the act charged, evidence of other criminal acts of the defendant cannot be introduced. Similarly, such evidence cannot be introduced to show intent if there is a substantial dispute concerning whether the event charged as a crime occurred at all. 85 In addition, other evidence of similar acts which is probative of intent or lack of accident solely because it supports an impermissible generalization about the defendant's violent disposition is inadmissible. 86

In addition to showing that probative value outweighs the potential for prejudice against the defendant, it must be shown that probative value is dependent on the existence of a close parallel between the crime charged and the prior acts. 87 A past crime is not relevant to intent unless it required the same form of intent that the government seeks to prove in the instant case. 88

A defendant in a criminal prosecution may introduce evidence of specific acts to demonstrate that he lacked the intent to commit the crime in question. 89

One court has summarized the rules of admissibility concerning similar acts by holding that evidence of similar acts may be admitted where:

- (1) there is substantial evidence that the defendant committed the similar act;
- (2) some special quality of the act tends to prove the defendant's identity or the motive, intent, absence of mistake or accident, scheme, plan, or system, and opportunity, preparation, and knowledge;
- (3) one or more of these factors are material to the defendant's guilt of the charged offense; and
- (4) the probative value of the evidence substantially outweighs the danger of unfair prejudice. 90

§ 437 ----Generally [SUPPLEMENT]

Practice Aids: Admissibility of evidence of prior physical acts of spousal abuse committed by defendant accused of murdering spouse or former spouse. 24 ALR5th 465.

Case authorities:

Evidence, in trial of former judge on bribery, mail fraud, RICO, etc. charges, of his prior advice to client not to tell whole truth to bankruptcy court, as well as his subsequent disbarment, was so remarkably like advice judge gave to sheriff in instant case and admissible to show whether defendant "respected truth as he defined it." United States v Grubb (1993, CA4 W Va) 11 F3d 426, digest op at (CA4 W Va) RICO Bus Disp Guide (CCH) ¶ 8437.

Evidence of defendant's participation in prior drug transaction was admissible in drug conspiracy trial on issue of intent, motive, and plan since defendant claimed lack of knowledge or involvement in drug conspiracy and in both instances defendant supplied second individual, who actually sold cocaine and delivered money to defendant. United States v Clemis (1993, CA6 Ohio) 11 F3d 597, motion den, reh den (CA6 Mich) 1994 US App LEXIS 1616 and petition for certiorari filed (Mar 9, 1994).

Evidence of defendant's involvement in prior drug transactions were properly admitted since they were similar to charged offense and relevant to show defendant's knowledge and intent and not that he was some hapless fool mistakenly caught up in overzealous law enforcement action. United States v Kreiser (1994, CA7 Ill) 15 F3d 635.

Evidence of tax evasion defendant's conduct during earlier income tax audit was relevant to his actual subjective intent and his understanding of his income tax obligations to file and pay tax on earnings from employment, and its admission was not contrary to policy concerning settlement negotiations, since it was admissible not to show his civil tax liability in those earlier years, but for "another purpose," i.e., his intent. United States v Hauert (1994, CA7 Ill) 40 F3d 197, 94 TNT 232-12.

Evidence of dividends bank fraud defendants received from defrauded bank was relevant to defendants' intent since they argued lack of intent to defraud because they had invested their own money in bank but evidence that they took dividends exceeding their original $2 investment undermined this claim. United States v Molinaro (1993, CA9 Cal) 11 F3d 853, 93 CDOS 8488, 93 Daily Journal DAR 14490.

In a first-degree murder prosecution in which defendant admitted that he had previously been convicted of assaulting his girlfriend, the prosecutor's cross-examination of defendant as to whether he had choked his girlfriend was admissible under Rule 404(b) to show intent and was not precluded under Rule 609 where the murder was committed by choking the victim; the prior assault by choking had occurred less than a year before the murder and was thus not remote in time; defendant's defense to the murder charge was lack of a specific intent to kill; defendant testified that he could not recall choking either the assault or the murder victim; and evidence that defendant had recently choked another victim was relevant to show his intent. State v Sexton (1994) 336 NC 321, 444 SE2d 879.

The trial court did not err in a prosecution for attempted rape and first-degree murder by admitting evidence of another rape to which defendant pled guilty, where the similarity between the two crimes, closely connected temporally, clearly supports the admission of the other rape to prove identity and intent. N.C.G.S. § 8C-1, Rule 404(b). State v Carter (1994) 338 NC 569, 451 SE2d 157.

Evidence of defendant's shooting of his former girlfriend at the time of their breakup and his conviction and sentence arising out of that shooting was admissible to show the chain of events that led to defendant's murder of his former girlfriend's new boyfriend just three months after their breakup and ten days after defendant's release from jail for the events surrounding their breakup. State v Ratliff (1995) 341 NC 610, 461 SE2d 325.

The trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting evidence regarding defendant's prior acts in engaging in excessive conduct with other co-employees and his reputation created thereby in an action for damages from an injury suffered during a movie stunt where plaintiff alleged willful and wanton, negligent and reckless conduct by defendant. The evidence was probative of defendant's motive, intent and the absence of mistake and was admissible under N.C.G.S. § 8C-1, Rule 404(b). Pinckney v Van Damme (1994) 116 NC App 139, 447 SE2d 825.

Even in jurisdictions which hold that evidence of other similar acts is generally inadmissible, such evidence is admissible to show a litigant's state of mind. 91

Evidence of similar acts committed in the past is relevant to prove intent or the absence of mistake. Thus, in an action for dental malpractice in which the plaintiff alleged that the defendant did unauthorized dental work, the plaintiff was allowed to get discovery concerning names and captions of other lawsuits brought against the defendant in which there were allegations of unauthorized work performed by the defendant. 92

§ 439 Intent as issue or likely issue in case

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

When the crime charged requires proof of specific intent, because intent is a material element to be proved by the government, intent is necessarily in issue and the government may submit evidence of other acts in an attempt to establish the matter in its case in chief. 93 In other words, the government is allowed to anticipate a defense of lack of intent. 94

While it has been held that where a defendant denies participation in the act or acts that constitute a specific-intent crime, intent is not a material issue for the purpose of applying Federal Rules of Evidence 404(b), 95 in other courts the government has been permitted to introduce evidence of other acts on this issue even where the defendant concedes the issue of intent. 96 Elsewhere the position has been taken that intent remains an issue in the case unless the defendant takes affirmative steps to remove the issue, such as by stipulation, 97 and that the defense of lack of involvement is insufficient to remove the issue of intent from the case. 98

◆ Observation: If the defendant's intent is clearly uncontested, then any nominal probative value of the extrinsic offense evidence will undoubtedly be outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice, and the evidence will not be admitted. 99

When a crime requires only general criminal intent—that is, when intent is only a formal issue so that proof of the proscribed act gives rise to an inference of intent—evidence 1 of specific intent or knowledge may be unnecessary and inadmissible under Federal Rules of Evidence 404(b). 2 To allow intent automatically to become an issue in cases in which intent is inferable from the nature of the act charged would create an exception that would virtually swallow the rule against admission of evidence of prior misconduct. 3

§ 439 ----Intent as issue or likely issue in case [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Government's motion in limine to introduce extrinsic-act evidence is denied after defendant agreed to stipulate intent in prosecution for possession of drugs with intent to distribute, but court's ruling made prior to stipulation indicated that introduction would be allowed, even where evidence would be in form of officer testimony about prior possession offense which resulted in conviction under youthful offender statute, because sentencing judge was unavailable to unseal record, since government lacked other evidence of intent and prejudicial effect would not outweigh probative value. United States v Salery (1993, MD Ala) 830 F Supp 596, later proceeding (MD Ala) 836 F Supp 812.

§ 440 Showing intent in drug cases

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

In prosecutions for possession of drugs or engaging in illegal drug transactions, evidence of prior drug offenses is often admissible to show the defendant's intent to participate in the transactions charged in the instant case. 4 Thus, an alleged coconspirator's testimony that she had previously sold drugs to defendant was admissible as probative of defendant's intent where his defense was that he was only a user of drugs, since evidence indicating previous deals suggested that his intent was not merely to use it. 5 Evidence of defendant's later possession of drugs or drug paraphernalia may also be admissible on the issue of intent where the circumstances showed the offense sufficiently similar in kind and reasonably close in time to instant charge. 6

But under the following circumstances, other drug-related offenses or transactions have been held inadmissible: the defendant's postconspiracy purchase of an illegal drug ingredient; 7 the defendant's presence in a place where substantial quantities of heroin were found since it was not probative of an intent to distribute that substance 16 days earlier; 8 a prior conviction for possession of a large amount of narcotics obviously to be used for distribution, since it bore questionable relevance to possession of a substance without intent to distribute, and the prejudicial effect of the evidence outweighed its probative value; 9 and evidence in a narcotics case that 2 1/2 years earlier the defendant was in the company of another person who possessed drugs, such evidence not being sufficient to justify the conclusion that the defendant knowingly possessed drugs at that time. 10

If the defendant offers to stipulate that he had the requisite intent to distribute if the government proved possession, evidence of prior felony convictions may not be admissible. 11

§ 440 ----Showing intent in drug cases [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Evidence of defendant's prior drug and weapons activities were relevant to his knowledge, intent, and plan to possess controlled substances with intent to manufacture methamphetamine, hence properly admitted. United States v Benbrook (1994, CA5 Tex) 40 F3d 88, reh den (1995, CA5 Tex) 1995 US App LEXIS 555.

Evidence that witness and defendant once had agreement that witness could sell cocaine out of defendant's store was admissible to show that defendant's state of mind was conducive to allowing distribution of crack cocaine from his store and to conspiring to distributing cocaine from his store, and therefore admissible. United States v Scott (1995, CA5 Miss) 48 F3d 1389, reh, en banc, den (1995, CA5 Miss) 1995 US App LEXIS 14246.

In prosecution for possession with intent to distribute and unlawful importation of cocaine, district court did not err in permitting evidence of defendant's prior cocaine-related conviction on issue of intent since defendant offered neither stipulation, admission nor evidence which removed issue of intent from government's case. United States v Zanabria (1996, CA5 Tex) 74 F3d 590 (criticized in United States v Thompson (1996, CA9 Alaska) 82 F3d 849, 96 CDOS 2950, 96 Daily Journal DAR 4879).

Evidence of defendant's prior crack sales to witness resembled factual circumstances of offense with which he was charged and were admissible as relevant to his intent to distribute. United States v Davis (1994, CA6 Tenn) 15 F3d 526, 1994 FED App 10P.

Prior uncharged drug-selling conduct of defendant charged with conspiracy to distribute cocaine base was properly admitted as to defendant's intent to distribute and to establish defendant's plan to carry out conspiracy charged since it was similar and close in time to charged acts. United States v Wright (1994, CA6 Tenn) 16 F3d 1429, 1994 FED App 49P, cert den (US) 1994 US LEXIS 5027.

Evidence of defendant's two prior narcotics sales to confidential informant were admissible in trial for cocaine possession with intent to distribute since it was relevant to specific intent government was required to prove as element of crime charged. United States v Johnson (1994, CA6 Tenn) 27 F3d 1186, 1994 FED App 240p.

Evidence of defendant's prior drug dealing was properly admitted to prove intent since, despite defendant's decision to deny all charges rather than claim he made innocent mistakes, prosecution still needed to show that if he was hiding something it was more than just his poor judgment in picking his friends, but that it was in fact his own intent to buy drugs for eventual resale. United States v Brown (1994, CA7 Ill) 34 F3d 569.

Heroin distribution defendant's prior narcotics conviction was not admissible to prove intent since defendant did not dispute that he had requisite intent, but it was admissible to rebut his defense of entrapment. United States v Bastanipour (1994, CA7 Ill) 41 F3d 1178.

Evidence that cocaine distribution defendant had provided witness with narcotics in exchange for sexual favors and used drugs with witness was probative of defendant's intent because it helped establish that defendant knew that narcotics were stored at his house, that he was associating himself with their storage, distribution, and consumption, and that he was familiar with commercial possibilities of trading in cocaine. United States v Gregory (1996, CA7 Ill) 74 F3d 819, 43 Fed Rules Evid Serv 954.

Evidence that defendant charged with possession of cocaine with intent to distribute had previously been arrested for driving with suspended license, and that search incident to that arrest uncovered pager, cash, and baggies containing cocaine base, was admissible to disprove knowledge and intent issues raised by defense that defendant was caught in "wrong place at wrong time." United States v Wiley (1994, CA8 Minn) 29 F3d 345, reh, en banc, den (1994, CA8 Minn) 1994 US App LEXIS 21409.

Videotape documenting substantial indoor marijuana growing operation at defendants' prior residence in Maine was properly admitted in prosecution for marijuana-growing operation in new residence in Kansas for purposes of showing knowledge, intent, and common scheme or plan, and to show both defendants' participation. United States v Fitzherbert (1993, CA10 Kan) 13 F3d 340, cert den (US) 62 USLW 3705.

Evidence of defendant's prior cocaine sale to undercover officer, discovery of two kilograms of cocaine in van he was driving, and apparent attempt to take delivery of two kilograms of cocaine at hotel were relevant to his intent to distribute cocaine. United States v Hardwell (1996, CA10 Kan) 80 F3d 1471, on reh, reh den, in part, reh, en banc, den, remanded (1996, CA10) 1996 US App LEXIS 16617.

Evidence of uncharged drug offenses was admissible to prove intent, which defendant placed at issue by pleading not guilty to drug distribution conspiracy charges against him. United States v Maxwell (1994, CA11 Ala) 34 F3d 1006, 8 FLW Fed C 731.

Evidence that drug trafficking defendants had been involved in prior drug transactions was admissible as evidence of their intent to act distribute cocaine as charged. United States v Clarke (1994, App DC) 24 F3d 257.

Evidence of other crimes, wrongs, or acts may also be admissible as probative of intent in tax prosecutions, 12 in prosecutions for uttering forged instruments, 13 in prosecutions for fraud or counterfeiting, 14 in prosecution for making false entry in bank records and willfully misapplying bank funds, 15 and in prosecutions for receipt or sale of stolen goods, to demonstrate that the defendant was aware that the goods were stolen. 16

Where a case involves a claim for insurance proceeds met by a defense of arson and concealment, the essential issue is the difference between an accident and an intentional act, and evidence of similar wrongful conduct is particularly relevant to probe the questions of intent and plan to burn insured properties. 17

Other evidence of other crimes, wrongs, or acts which has been admitted to show intent includes—

—testimony regarding the defendant's assault upon an individual, accompanied by a warning as to what would happen to an informer, as probative of the defendant's intent and motivation when he told the witness to leave town and warned that it might be good for his health if he said nothing, where the crimes charged required proof of a specific intent to obstruct justice. 18

—evidence of defendant's participation in two previous escapes, in a prosecution for obtaining and possessing objects designed or intended to be used to facilitate escape from prison, notwithstanding that the method involved in each escape plan was different. 19

—testimony, in an age discrimination in employment case, by employees of plaintiff's employer as to alleged age discrimination against them, since testimony of other employees about their treatment by defendant is relevant to the issue of the employer's discriminatory intent. 20

—testimony, in a prosecution under the Mann Act, 21 by three young women that the defendant had beaten, raped, and forced them into prostitution in the same manner as charged in the instant case with regard to two other women. 22

—evidence that defendant had sodomized and sexually abused witnesses when they were children, which was sufficiently similar to the instant charges of sexual abuse and abusive sexual contact to be admitted on the issue of intent. 23

—evidence of a defendant's previous batteries of a victim, where the defendant takes the stand and testifies that a homicide was accidental and thus done without the requisite criminal intent. 24

—testimony tending to show that in instances other than that charged in an indictment under 18 USCS § 242 for depriving inmates of a state hospital of their federally protected right to personal security, the defendant had engaged in acts of misconduct toward the inmates. 25

—testimony relating to prior similar acts in a prosecution for conspiracy. 26

—a prior conviction for the same offense, offered to rebut an intoxication defense. 27

—evidence of defendant's prior misdemeanor convictions for driving while intoxicated as relevant to the issue of malice in a prosecution for second-degree murder arising out of an automobile accident that occurred while defendant was intoxicated. 28

—evidence of defendant's participation in the theft of a weapon, if evidence is admitted tending to show the use of a stolen weapon in the offense charged. 29

—evidence of possession of other firearms on the issue of knowledge and intent to exercise control over firearms. 30

—a statement by defendant admitting participating in several other robberies with an associate, in a prosecution for felony murder and attempted second degree robbery, arising out of the shooting by defendant's associate of a taxi driver during an attempted robbery, where prior robberies were each perpetrated at the same location against potential drug purchasers. 31

—testimony of an admitted participant in the charged bank robbery as to a telephone conversation with the defendant following such robbery concerning the future commission of a bank robbery. 32

—evidence of a prior bank robbery committed by a defendant who claimed that he committed the robbery charged in the instant case while under hypnosis. 33

But in a prosecution for aiding and abetting a bank robbery, evidence of defendant's conviction for possession of stolen bank money, ten years earlier, was not admissible since, although a prior conviction showed defendant had knowingly possessed stolen bank money ten years earlier, it did not show that defendant intended that the bank be robbed or participated in the earlier robbery. 34

§ 441 ----Showing intent in other particular criminal cases [SUPPLEMENT]

Practice Aids: Admissibility of evidence of commission of similar crime by one other than accused. 22 ALR5th 1.

Case authorities:

Evidence of defendant's purchase and possession of two firearms was not admissible as proof of his intent to commit charged crimes of making interstate threats and extortionate demands, or as indicative of his plan or preparation, since government offered no evidence showing connection between defendant's possession of firearms and his intent to place telephone calls and say things he said, nor was there evidence linking his purchase of firearms in June with any planning or preparing to carry out threats of violence over month later. United States v Himelwright (1994, CA3) 42 F3d 777.

IRS special agent's testimony explaining how defendants' activities constituted concealment for purposes of money laundering was not impermissible since he gave no opinion on defendants' subject intent in pursuing particular activity, rather he gave opinion that objectively established conduct constituted concealment. United States v Barber (1996, CA4 Va) 80 F3d 964.

Evidence of Mann Act defendant's drug use and violent outbursts was admissible as relevant to how he controlled and transported women, since his intent in traveling from Texas to New Mexico was hotly disputed issue, and court gave strong jury instruction on limited use of such evidence. United States v Campbell (1995, CA5 Tex) 49 F3d 1079.

Sexually explicit descriptions of uncharged graphic interchange format files and videotapes were probative of defendants' scienter and pandering in connection with their operation of electronic bulletin board; defendants posted these graphic descriptions in public areas of computer bulletin board system as way of advertising for members.

United States v Thomas (1996, CA6 Tenn) 74 F3d 701, 96 CDOS 609, 43 Fed Rules Evid Serv 969, reh, en banc, den (1996, CA6 Tenn) 1996 US App LEXIS 4529.

In prosecution of defendant for arson resulting in death of his two children, evidence of defendant's prior conviction for sexual exploitation of child, for which he was on probation, was intricately related to arson charge and properly admitted to establish motive since government's theory was that defendant burned building where wife and children were sleeping to prevent them from reporting that he had been sexually abusing children, which would result in revocation of his probation; any prejudice was minimal because court instructed jury not to consider evidence for any purpose other than motive and intent. United States v Menzer (1994, CA7 Wis) 29 F3d 1223, cert den (1994, US) 63 USLW 3386.

In prosecution of bank officer for soliciting and accepting kickbacks, district court did not abuse its discretion in determining that probative value of evidence that defendant violated bank's code of conduct outweighed its prejudicial effect since, although it had slight tendency to show defendant's propensity to commit wrongs, its predominant effect pertained to legitimate purpose of proving intent. United States v Sinclair (1996, CA7 Ill) 74 F3d 753, 43 Fed Rules Evid Serv 743.

Evidence that accomplice of money laundering defendant was involved in narcotics trafficking and had exorbitant lifestyle was properly admitted as relevant to demonstrate defendant's intent to structure financial transaction to avoid currency reporting requirements and motive for doing so. United States v Mitchell (1994, CA8 Mo) 31 F3d 628.

In bribery prosecution against judge, evidence that codefendant attorney had given bribes to another, convicted, judge was properly admitted on issue of codefendant's intent since codefendant raised "rainmaking" defense, i.e., he conned other undercover informant and never tried to bribe judge. United States v Shields (1993, CA7 Ill) 999 F2d 1090, reh, en banc, den (CA7 Ill) 1993 US App LEXIS 21884 and petition for certiorari filed (Oct 18, 1993).

In prosecution for assault with intent to murder his wife, evidence of defendant's prior attacks on his wife were properly admitted on issue of intent; tangential differences were meaningless relative to essential identity remaining between victim, assailant, manner of assault and nature of harm involved. United States v Hinton (1994, CA9 Ariz) 31 F3d 817, 94 CDOS 5815, 94 Daily Journal DAR 10565.

Evidence of items with defendant's signature, though not specifically related to particular counts of indictment charging securities, wire, and bank fraud and money laundering stemming from investment scheme, were admissible to show defendant's intent, knowledge, and absence of mistake or accident regarding how monies from investment scheme were being transferred into accounts held by defendant and his wife and misused. United States v Kunzman (1995, CA10 Colo) 54 F3d 1522.

Evidence that defendant failed to pay federal taxes during period of check kiting was admissible to show defendant's intent to defraud bank and to rebut notion that he believed bank consented to his transactions with it. United States v Pless (1996, App DC) 79 F3d 1217.

In prosecution for child molestation based on various different incidents involving three different children unrelated to defendant, evidence of uncharged incidents of molestation involving defendant's two daughters was properly admitted as evidence of common design or plan, where offenses shared sufficient common features, and where degree of similarity between offenses was sufficient to prove intent. People v Carradus (1994, 2nd Dist) 29 Cal App 4th 1, 34 Cal Rptr 2d 459, 94 CDOS 7874, 94 Daily Journal DAR 14514, review den, op withdrawn by order of ct (Cal) 95 CDOS 228.

In prosecution on several counts of lewd and lascivious acts involving defendant's touching of girls between ages of 7 and 14 whom he had encountered at beach, evidence of prior uncharged acts was admissible to (1) prove that defendant's grabbing of one victim's crotch was deliberate act rather than merely unintentional act while he was helping her in water, in light of similar circumstances of prior acts; and (2) establish disputed issue of defendant's identity as person who molested other victim, based on distinctive similarities in defendant's befriending of young girls at beach. People v Dablon (1994, 4th Dist) 29 Cal App 4th 454, 34 Cal Rptr 2d 761, 94 CDOS 8038, 94 Daily Journal DAR 14823, review gr (Cal) 95 CDOS 228.

In prosecution of husband for murder of wife, tape recording of argument between defendant and wife, which took place when he was jailed for prior battery of victim, was admissible to illustrate defendant's motive, intent, or bent of mind. Sumpter v State (1990) 260 Ga 683, 398 SE2d 12.

In prosecution for child molestation, tape of conversation between defendant and one of alleged victims was properly admitted as proof of similar crimes to show motive, intent, bent of mind, or lustful disposition, even though defendant was acquitted of charges against that particular victim. McGee v State (1992) 205 Ga App 722, 423 SE2d 666, 92 Fulton County D R 1899, cert den (Ga) 1993 Ga LEXIS 44.

Trial court in robbery prosecution properly admitted evidence that defendant committed similar robbery on day after charged crime, where court admitted evidence, and so advised jury, for limited purpose of showing defendant's knowledge and intent. Hill v State (1994) 212 Ga App 386, 441 SE2d 863, 94 Fulton County D R 936, corrected, reconsideration den (Ga App) 94 Fulton County D R 1182 and cert den (Ga) 1994 Ga LEXIS 662.

In a first-degree murder prosecution in which defendant admitted that he had previously been convicted of assaulting his girlfriend, the prosecutor's cross-examination of defendant as to whether he had choked his girlfriend was admissible under Rule 404(b) to show intent and was not precluded under Rule 609 where the murder was committed by choking the victim; the prior assault by choking had occurred less than a year before the murder and was thus not remote in time; defendant's defense to the murder charge was lack of a specific intent to kill; defendant testified that he could not recall choking either the assault or the murder victim; and evidence that defendant had recently choked another victim was relevant to show his intent. State v Sexton (1994) 336 NC 321, 444 SE2d 879.

In a murder prosecution, the court properly permitted the introduction of testimony by a witness that the defendant stated that he had just gotten out of jail and was going to kill the first white man he saw since such testimony was admissible as proof of the defendant's motive for the crime; the defendant's statement logically raised the inference that he perceived his previous incarceration to be the result of unexplained actions by white males for which he was seeking revenge. Commonwealth v Williams (1995, Pa)

There was no prejudice in a first- degree murder prosecution where the trial court admitted court files relating to defendant's prior conviction for assault. The files were admitted for the nonhearsay purpose of showing motive, intent and plan and witnesses testified that defendant broke into the victim's home and attacked her, that the victim prosecuted the defendant for the assault and trespass, that the defendant harassed and threatened the victim, and that the victim believed that the defendant was going to kill her. The files added little, if anything, to the State's case. State v Alston (1995) 341 NC 198, 461 SE2d 687.

In the prosecution of the defendant for the murder of a police officer, it was not error to admit into evidence the portion of the defendant's confession in which he stated that he had armed himself on the night of the crime with the intention of robbing drug dealers since that statement was relevant to rebut the defendant's claim that he did not possess the requisite specific intent to kill the officer because of alleged fear generated by the conduct of the officer which rendered the defendant's conduct not willful and premeditated. Commonwealth v Bracey (1995, Pa) 662 A2d 1062, application gr (Pa) 1995 Pa LEXIS 1254.

In a prosecution for 2 murders to which the defendant confessed after he was arrested in connection with a rape, the rape victim and others were properly permitted to testify about the rape incident in order to establish that the killings were intentional and that the defendant acted with malice in killing his victims. Commonwealth v Miller (1995, Pa) 664 A2d 1310, petition for certiorari filed (Nov 21, 1995).

§ 442 Showing intent in tort cases

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

In civil negligence cases, evidence of other similar acts is generally inadmissible to show the defendant's intent or state of mind on a particular occasion, since the conduct typically at issue in civil cases represents much less a departure from an accepted norm than does conduct typically at issue in criminal cases, thus decreasing the probative worth of the other facts evidence to a point below the minimal standard of relevancy. 35

In a civil action in which punitive damages are sought, evidence of the defendants' alleged willful, wanton, and reckless acts committed after the alleged tortious act is not admissible to show that the defendants' actions at issue in the present case were similarly willful, wanton, and reckless. 36 But evidence of an insured's prior conspiracy to stage a fake slip and fall was admissible on the issue of intent where the insurer denied coverage on the basis of fraud. 37

§ 442 ----Showing intent in tort cases [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Evidence of drugs and guns found in apartment co-owned by defendant and his spouse was properly admitted as relevant to defendant's state of mind when he went to apartment, since defense theory was that defendant was electrician who was living elsewhere with girlfriend and only went to apartment to visit his children. United States v Rodriguez (1995, CA2 NY) 53 F3d 545.

In franchisee's action against franchisor for fraud under various state laws, equitable fraud, and negligence, testimony of former franchisees regarding misrepresentations franchisor made to them was not admissible as evidence of intent because intent was not essential element of Consumer Fraud Act violation, nor admissible as evidence of common plan or scheme since they were not part of single series of events, nor as relevant to issues such as motive, identity or intent since they were not in dispute; district court in fact acknowledged admitting evidence to establish defendant's propensity to commit charged act. J & R Ice Cream Corp. v California Smoothie Licensing Corp. (1994, CA3 NJ) 31 F3d 1259, 40 Fed Rules Evid Serv 34.

(4). To Show Knowledge [443-445]

View Entire Section Go to Parallel Reference Table Go to Supplement

As a general rule, whenever guilty knowledge is an essential element of the offense charged, evidence is admissible of acts committed by the accused and his conduct at or about the time of the commission of the offense charged against him which tend to establish his knowledge. 38 The Rules specifically provide that one purpose for which evidence of other crimes, wrongdoing, or acts may be admitted is knowledge; 39 this has been construed to mean proof of knowledge of the nature of one's acts or of the nature of items possessed. 40

◆ Observation: Although frequently linked by the courts to intent in cases where other crimes evidence is received, knowledge has been said to connote something less. The existence of the other act results in some sort of warning or knowledge which leads to knowledge in the case under consideration. 41

◆ Practice guide: The issue of knowledge may be raised by the defense. 42

In defendant's prosecution for DUI and speeding, evidence of defendant's refusal to submit to breathalyzer test was properly admitted as "other crimes" evidence; it showed consciousness of guilt and, thus, possessed independent relevance bearing on issue of defendant's intoxication. Spicer v State (1990) 32 Ark App 209, 799 SW2d 562.

In prosecutions for possession of drugs or engaging in illegal drug transactions, evidence of prior drug offenses or transactions have frequently been held admissible to show knowledge. 43 Such evidence includes—

—evidence of prior sale of drugs by defendant. 44

—evidence of defendant's prior narcotics conviction. 45

—evidence of defendants' prior arrests for possession of cocaine as relevant to showing that they had both requisite knowledge and intent to distribute and served to counter their mere presence defense. 46

—evidence of guns and drugs seized in an earlier search of defendant's residence. 47

—evidence that defendant had previously pled guilty to two unrelated charges of illegally possessing cocaine and marijuana admissible in a prosecution for aiding and abetting possession of cocaine with the intent to distribute, on issue of knowledge, despite defendant's defense of mistaken identity. 48

—evidence of defendant's involvement in cocaine smuggling 17 days before the transaction for which he was arrested to establish that defendant had knowledge of that mode of smuggling cocaine. 49

—evidence of defendant's possession of 500 grams of cocaine on another occasion as relevant to countering his defense that he was merely present at an attempted sale and had no knowledge of cocaine or intent to aid and abet its distribution. 50

—evidence of purchase and use of ether and hydrochloric acid to show knowledge about the contents of a package containing cocaine base, since both chemicals are used to process cocaine base. 51

—testimony regarding a conversation between a police officer and the defendant concerning the possible purchase of other contraband, in a prosecution for knowingly and intentionally distributing cocaine. 52

—evidence of defendant's involvement in a prior shipment of marijuana as highly probative in evaluating his claim that he was unaware that the truck he was driving when arrested contained over 700 pounds of marijuana. 53

—evidence of a series of 19 mailings that were similar to the mailing referred to in an indictment for conspiracy to possess cocaine with intent to distribute, and use of mails to facilitate drug trafficking, as showing that defendant had knowledge of the package's contents and the intent to perpetrate the crimes charged. 54

—ten-year-old drug records bearing defendant's fingerprints and pertaining to transactions unrelated to those charged to prove knowledge, where defendant denied knowingly possessing drugs. 55

—evidence that a narcotics defendant sold crack cocaine on a daily basis for at least one month prior to his arrest, where defendant denied knowledge of drugs found in the car he was driving. 56

—evidence of a prior unrelated drug transaction where a narcotics defendant denied knowledge of items seized from his residence. 57

—evidence of a prior smuggling attempt involving a truck previously owned by defendant, to prove his awareness that tractor-trailer rigs are used to smuggle large quantities of marijuana across the border and that his own tractor-trailer rig had been so used. 58

—evidence of prior acts tending to associate the defendant with illegal narcotics activities to rebut the defense that the defendant was unaware that her truck was being used to transport marijuana. 59

Evidence of involvement with drugs occurring after the offense charged may also be admissible on the issue of knowledge. Thus, evidence that defendant had subsequently imported marijuana was admissible on the issue of knowledge that another vehicle contained cocaine. 60 And evidence that defendant attempted to participate in a cocaine sale subsequent to his arrest was admissible as probative of his knowledge that narcotics were in a package in his possession when he was arrested. 61

On the other hand, in a prosecution for importing narcotics, evidence of numerous prior trips out of country is not admissible, absent any indication that prior trips were narcotics-related or were anything other than innocent travel, and those trips did not make it any more likely that defendant knew he carried narcotics at the time of the incident leading to his arrest. 62 And in a prosecution for importing marijuana with intent to distribute, evidence of defendant's prior drug use was not relevant to establish his knowledge of marijuana in his gas tank; such evidence was inadmissible because it is only probative of a defendant's character. 63

§ 444 ----In drug cases [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Admission of drug paraphernalia seized from defendant's mother's house was intrinsic to charged crime of possession with intent to distribute cocaine and probative of his knowledge that bags in his briefcase contained cocaine and that he intended to distribute that cocaine. United States v Manning (1996, CA1 RI) 79 F3d 212.

Evidence that defendant charged with heroin conspiracy, importation, and possession with intent to distribute possessed small quantity of heroin with which he was not charged was properly admitted since defendant placed his knowledge in issue by claiming not to know that briefcase handed to him in airport contained heroin, and small quantity carried by defendant was packaged in manner more consistent with dealer's sample than personal use. United States v Aminy (1994, CA2 NY) 15 F3d 258.

Evidence that defendant charged with possession with intent to distribute heroin and opium told witness that he needed to send $20,000 to Amsterdam for heroin he had received on credit was highly probative and therefore admissible since defendant disclaimed lack of knowledge of drugs in his possession. United States v Jaswal (1995, CA2 NY) 47 F3d 539.

Evidence that defendant charged with manufacturing and distribution conspiracy involving methamphetamine had sold "speed" to witness several times was admissible after defendant testified and portrayed himself to be completely innocent of involvement or even knowledge of production and distribution of methamphetamine. United States v Gibson (1995, CA5 Tex) 55 F3d 173.

Marijuana and related paraphernalia discovered in defendants' home had little or no probative worth in establishing defendants' knowledge and intent vis a vis charged conspiracy that ended 18 months' earlier. United States v Betts (1994, CA7 Ill) 16 F3d 748, 38 Fed Rules Evid Serv 1070.

Evidence of prior drug dealing by cocaine distribution conspirators was admissible to establish their knowledge and intent during charged conspiracy; transactions were sufficiently similar and one conspirator placed her intent in issue by claiming that she was only another conspirator's girlfriend and did not know that her actions were assisting conspiracy. United States v Mounts (1994, CA7 Ill) 35 F3d 1208, reh den (1994, CA7 Ill) 1994 US App LEXIS 33070 and reh den (1994, CA7 Ill) 1994 US App LEXIS 33652.

Evidence of defendant's prior arrest for possession of one gram of cocaine was admissible for cocaine offense arising out of incident when he and codefendant were arrested after one of them pulled 165.4 grams of cocaine out from under driver's set of car in which they were riding and gave it to confidential informant, since defendant disclaimed knowingly participating in charged offense. United States v Santa-Cruz (1995, CA9 Wash) 48 F3d 1118, 95 CDOS 1469.

Evidence that defendant was present at various other methamphetamine "cooks" within several months prior to incident when he was arrested was admissible to show his knowledge of process of "cooking" methamphetamine and that he intended to be part of conspiracy, since he maintained he was innocently present at "cook." United States v Deninno (1994, CA10 Okla) 29 F3d 572, op withdrawn (Aug 2, 1994) and amd, reh, en banc, den (1994, CA10 Kan) 1994 US App LEXIS 25622.

Cocaine importation and distribution conspirator's prior drug convictions were admissible, notwithstanding his willingness to stipulate to his intent, since government sought to introduce them to also prove knowledge, motive, and absence of mistake or misapprehension. United States v Taylor (1994, CA11 Ga) 17 F3d 333, 8 FLW Fed C 53.

Evidence of forfeiture claimant's knowledge of illegal activities at property where claimant was found, along with numerous narcotics trafficking items, was relevant to claimant's knowledge of illegal activities that took place at defendant property, hence admissible; claimant's knowledge was only contested issue. United States v Rural Route 1, Box 137-B (1994, CA6 Ohio) 24 F3d 845, 1994 FED App 166P, mod and reh den (1994, CA6) 1994 US App LEXIS 17336.

Evidence regarding prior cocaine sales by defendant was admissible to show that defendant knew of cocaine that was seized at restaurant and had intent to distribute it and because it suggested that defendant did have knowledge of cocaine sales being made at the restaurant and had participated in them. Evidence of other crimes, wrongs, or acts that have been ruled admissible on the issue of knowledge include——evidence that other goods were sold by the defendant at unreasonably low prices, in a federal prosecution for possessing and selling stolen goods (videocassette tapes) where one issue at trial was whether the defendant knew that the goods were stolen. 64

—evidence of prior incidents in which an airline's aircraft had been intercepted in Soviet airspace, as evidence of what the crew knew or should have known about the consequences of their conduct and to rebut the airline's suggestion that misprogramming was impossible or correctable en route, in a suit arising out of the aircraft's being shot down over Soviet airspace. 65

—evidence that the defendants repeatedly paid for the transportation of aliens, knowing that they were illegal aliens, on the issue of knowledge as to the illegal status of the aliens alleged to have been transported illegally in the instant case. 66

—evidence of a conviction of a nearly identical felony as highly probative in a prosecution for unlawfully transporting undocumented aliens, given defendant's assertion that he lacked knowledge of the aliens' undocumented status. 67

—evidence of the defendant's role in six prior marriages involving aliens, in a prosecution involving a scheme whereby sham marriages with United States citizens were arranged for aliens so that they might defeat the immigration laws. 68

—testimony, in a prosecution for knowing receipt of a stolen front-end loader, by two witnesses that they had previously sold stolen goods to the defendant and that the defendant had also bought stolen goods from them after the date of the sale of the front-end loader. 69

—evidence of similar acts in prosecution for transportation in interstate commerce of vehicles knowing them to have been stolen. 70

—police reports pertaining to defendant's neighbor borrowing defendant's truck to carry stolen goods, to show defendant's knowledge, in a theft prosecution, that the goods were stolen. 71

—tape recorded conversations of an undercover agent and defendant's two coconspirators who had pled guilty in a prosecution for conspiracy to transport stolen aircraft, where the undercover agent testified that defendant acknowledged stealing the airplane referred to in tape recordings as bearing directly on whether defendant believed he was involved in a legitimate piloting job. 72

—evidence that a defendant charged with embezzlement had previously been convicted of falsifying bank records, to show that the defendant had a knowledge of banking and had the ability to plan an embezzlement of the sort claimed to have taken place. 73 —evidence that defendant had attempted to have his mother cash altered postal orders to show knowledge of a scheme to commit mail fraud. 74

—cross-examination of the defendant regarding prior instances in which he had been present in an automobile with a shotgun, where the defendant, charged with unlawful receipt of firearms and ammunition transported in interstate commerce, had testified that he would not have gotten into the car if he had known there was a gun in it. 75

—testimony that a witness observed a knife in the defendant's possession on earlier occasions, in a prosecution for possessing a knife in prison. 76

—evidence concerning a defendant's offer to sell machine guns and hand grenades, in a prosecution for possession of an unregistered firearm. 77

—accomplice's testimony that a year earlier he and defendant had participated in an armed robbery of another dice game in the same town, in a prosecution for knowingly transferring a firearm knowing it would be used to commit a crime of violence. 78

—evidence of defendant's participation in other similar businesses and money laundering to establish that he understood that the activity at the businesses in question was fraudulent. 79

—evidence that the defendant had previously committed acts in an effort to defraud purchasers of livestock, in a prosecution for defrauding farmers of money in connection with the sale of livestock. 80

—evidence that defendant had for years engaged in the routine killing of birds in a prosecution for killing migratory birds, where defense counsel placed defendant's knowledge at issue by portraying defendant as an absentee owner who had little knowledge of the daily operation of a fish farm or the number of birds killed. 81

—evidence that cocaine, nine pistols and a .30-caliber rifle, stereo and video equipment without serial numbers, and fur and leather jackets without labels were seized in the town house of a defendant charged with possession of an unregistered machine gun and unregistered silencer, the defendant having testified that he had no knowledge of the presence of the machine gun and silencer in his town house. 82

—defendant's statement to witness, a month or two after the charged conduct, that he was dumping chemicals, which was admissible on the issue of defendant's knowledge of the illegal character of his conduct in a prosecution for knowingly and willfully disposing of hazardous waste without obtaining a permit. 83

—evidence that historical documents found in defendant's residence had identifying marks removed, as admissible to prove defendant's knowledge that similar documents in the instant case were stolen. 84

—evidence of prior convictions for sexually molesting young girls in a trial for child pornography, to show that defendant had actual knowledge that the girl in the photographs was a minor. 85

—testimony of an indicted public official that defendant had, two weeks prior to the bribe offer forming the basis of the instant case, contacted him and offered to fix his trial, as relevant to defendant's knowledge in a case alleging a conspiracy to obstruct justice. 86

On the other hand, a court has ruled inadmissible as proof of knowledge testimony, in the trial for receipt of a firearm by a convicted felon of a defendant in whose car pistols had been found, that the defendant had been seen in possession of a different pistol some time a few years earlier, the evidence having no purpose other than to show that the defendant had a propensity to commit the crimes for which he was on trial. 87

§ 445 ----In other particular cases [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

At trial on charges of possessing or selling stolen motor vehicles, evidence of tools and materials seized at defendant's home which were suitable for obliterating, altering, and replacing vehicle identification numbers, as well as small collection of license plates, was admissible since it was directly probative of his knowledge that vehicles he sold had been stolen, which he controverted. United States v Tutiven (1994, CA1 Mass) 40 F3d 1.

Evidence of nine stolen checks addressed to third party which had been fraudulently cashed or deposited was relevant to show defendant's knowledge that endorsements on two checks charged in indictment were fraudulent, since other evidence portrayed defendant as someone attempting to launder numerous stolen checks, expert testimony established that writing on nine matched that on one of indictment checks and that defendant's fingerprint appeared on one, and checks were relevant to conflicting testimony about how defendant came into possession of them. United States v Rubin (1994, CA2 NY) 37 F3d 49.

In prosecution for conspiring to possess and utter forged securities, evidence of defendants' prior convictions involving use of money orders in questions was admissible on issue of one defendant's knowledge and intent to deceive with respect to money orders, and to explain investigators' ability to connect other defendant with money orders without need to obtain handwriting exemplars from him. United States v Thomas (1995, CA2 NY) 54 F3d 73.

Notwithstanding mail fraud defendant's offer to stipulate that he possessed knowledge, intent, motive, opportunity or other fact sought to be established by other acts evidence, district court did not err in admitting evidence of defendant's involvement in prior similar schemes since defendant's offer was not sufficiently comprehensive to remove issues of knowledge and intent from case. United States v Jemal (1994, CA3 NJ) 26 F3d 1267.

Weapons seized from defendant's home were similar enough to seized weapons to be introduced as probative of defendant's knowledge of processes used to convert semi-automatic weapons into machine guns and to obliterate their manufacturer's serial numbers; weapons from home were originally manufactured to be semi-automatic but were either partially or fully converted to fire as machine guns, and manufacturer's serial numbers on some had been obliterated. United States v Tylkowski (1993, CA7 Ill) 9 F3d 1255.

In prosecution for Medicare fraud, videotape of promotional presentation for defendant's lost charge audit services that defendant made to prospective client was admissible other acts evidence because it tended to show that when she previously submitted false Medicare claims she knew they were false. United States v DeSalvo (1994, CA9 Cal) 41 F3d 505, 94 CDOS 9061, 94 Daily Journal DAR 16839.

In residents' suit against owner of waferboard manufacturing facility on negligence per se and common law nuisance theories, evidence of defendant's air quality violations at similar facility in another state were properly admitted for limited purpose of showing defendant's prior knowledge and notice of emissions, both content and quality, that would result from operation in question. Orjias v Stevenson (1994, CA10 Colo) 31 F3d 995, cert den (1994, US) 63 USLW 3386.

In prosecution for sexual abuse of six- year-old girl, testimony of grandmother regarding prior sexual conduct to show alternative source of knowledge was neither relevant nor probative where testimony of victim was simple, child-like recollections of unlawful touching which was probative without reference to any prior sexual experience or knowledge of any sexual connotation in conduct attributed to defendant. State v Sloan (1995, Mo App) 912 SW2d 592.

In prosecution for burglary of credit union, trial court properly admitted audiotapes of codefendant's conversations with defendant over objection that portions of them contained inadmissible evidence of other crimes; those portions of tapes were probative of defendant's knowledge about dismantling alarm systems and about credit unions in general. Witt v Commonwealth (1992) 15 Va App 215, 422 SE2d 465.

(5). To Show Opportunity and Absence of Mistake [446, 447]

§ 446 Showing opportunity

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Use of evidence of other crimes to prove opportunity generally involves a showing that the defendant had the capacity or ability to commit the wrongful act with which he is charged; capacity or ability being generally used in the sense of wherewithal or organization. 88

Evidence that has been ruled admissible on the issue of opportunity to commit an offense includes——an alleged bank robber's possession of a gun similar to that used to commit the robbery. 89

—handguns found in the possession of defendants charged with using extortionate means to collect loans, the defendants' possession of the guns tending to show that their numerous threats to their victims were real and that they had the wherewithal to carry them out. 90

—facts establishing malice in a civil suit for assault and battery wherein punitive damages are sought, to rebut a theory of self-defense. 91

—evidence of defendants' prior involvement in drugs to show how they became involved in an alleged marijuana conspiracy. 92

—evidence that defendant had sold drugs in a house on one date, to show his ability to control drugs that were found in the same house at a later date. 93

—evidence tending to demonstrate an accused's possession of and proficiency with a weapon that could have been used in the commission of a violent crime, so long as there is evidence that such a crime has been committed and the accused is identified as having been at or near the scene of the crime, even where the weapon is not otherwise directly linked to the defendant at the time of the alleged offense. 94

—evidence in extortion trial that the defendant demanded illegal payments other than those for which he is on trial, the evidence tending to show that the defendant had the power to carry out his extortionate threats. 95

—evidence of large cash transactions tending to show the methods by which the bank's affairs were conducted and the locus of real management and control in a prosecution for misapplication of bank funds and participation in "loan kickback" schemes. 96

—evidence that a U.S. Customs officer had helped a friend smuggle gold statues by driving him through a security checkpoint, in a prosecution for murder and robbery of a money courier by two customs officers, to show that defendant might have had the ability to surreptitiously escort the victim off the airport grounds. 97

§ 446 ----Showing opportunity [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Evidence of earlier, uncharged drug sale was properly admitted to show opportunity, knowledge and plan in defendant's prosecution on cocaine base distribution charges since it set stage for charged transaction four days later in establishing buyer-seller relationship between undercover agent and defendant and showing that defendant was familiar with cocaine business and not innocent bystander. United States v Wilson (1994, CA7 Ill) 31 F3d 510.

Testimony concerning armed robbery, home invasion, and unlawful restraint was probative of defendant's opportunity to possess handgun, and its admission was not prejudicial since other evidence was sufficient for his conviction of being felon in possession of firearm; therefore, admission of challenged evidence did not produce jury verdict other than one that would have been rendered in its absence. United States v Burrows (1995, CA7 Ill) 48 F3d 1011, cert den (1995, US) 1995 US LEXIS 4445.

Evidence that past owner of airline company, charged with being person responsible for paying company's federal withholding taxes, controlled which bills were paid was not evidence of prior bad acts but evidence of opportunity to control which debts were paid, absence of mistake as to which debts were paid, and attention to which debts were paid. Phillips v United States IRS (1996, CA9 Hawaii) 73 F3d 939, 96 CDOS 243, 96 Daily Journal DAR 356, CCH Unemployment Ins Rep ¶ 15083B, 96-1 USTC ¶ 50057, 77 AFTR 2d 96-379.

In prosecution for lewd and lascivious act with daughter, trial court did not err when it allowed victim to testify about uncharged acts, where defendant opened door for evidence since he alleged that he never had opportunity to commit act because he was never alone with victim and victim's testimony that defendant was alone with her on many occasions—and performed other acts—refuted his allegation. State v Drennon (1994, Idaho App) 883 P2d 704.

The trial court did not err in a first-degree murder prosecution involving poisoning by allowing the State to introduce testimony from a registered nurse who had cared for the victim during his final illness concerning medical techniques and medical equipment used to treat the victim. Although defendant contended that the sole purpose of the testimony was to generate sympathy for the victim's family, the testimony was probative to show that defendant had access to the victim in the hospital, that a correlation existed between defendant's feeding the victim and the onset of his symptoms, that the victim manifested symptoms associated with multiple system failure incident to arsenic poisoning, that the victim could swallow food notwithstanding the tubes, that arsenic could have been introduced into the victim's body via the feeding tubes, and that the victim suffered inordinate pain over an extended period of time. The probative value of the testimony outweighed any unfair prejudice to defendant; furthermore, the record discloses that similar evidence from other witnesses was admitted without objection. State v Moore (1994) 335 NC 567, 440 SE2d 797.

The trial court did not err in a first-degree murder prosecution by admitting testimony concerning defendant's actions prior to and after the murder where the testimony tends to implicate defendant in the theft of quarters missing from the victim's bedroom and therefore in the murder, and tends to show that defendant had the opportunity to carry out his threats to kill the victim on the night of the murder. Although defendant argued that the probative value of the testimony was substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice, the defendant did not demonstrate any abuse of discretion. State v Alston (1995) 341 NC 198, 461 SE2d 687.

§ 447 Showing absence of mistake or accident

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Evidence of other acts, crimes, or wrongs, such as evidence of a prior conviction for the same offense as that charged, is admissible to show an absence of mistake or accident in the charged acts, and to negate the likelihood that the crime was committed as a result of inadvertence. 98 Admissible prior bad acts introduced to show intent where the defendant raises the defense of mistake need not show incidents identical to the events charged, so long as they are closely related to the offense and tend to rebut the defense of mistake. 99 Thus, in a tax evasion case, evidence that defendant submitted a false W-4 Form and did not file an income tax return for one year was relevant to show willfulness and absence of mistake in filing forms containing false information. 1 Evidence of subsequent acts may also be admissible. 2

In child abuse prosecutions, where there are usually no eyewitnesses to identify the source of the injuries and often the defendant challenges the circumstantial evidence of the crime by arguing that the child's injuries were caused accidentally, Rule 404(b) can permit the admission of evidence of other crimes, wrongs, or acts, such as the defendant's abuse of other children, or previous abuse of the same child, to show the absence of mistake or accident in the instant case. 3

But in a prosecution for first degree murder, evidence of two prior acts of a defendant involving recovery of property at gunpoint and shooting into another's home should not have been admitted, since such evidence did not rebut the defenses of accident or mistake, and the prior acts did not tend to show that it was unlikely that defendant could have mistaken the victim for his recent assailant. 4

§ 447 ----Showing absence of mistake or accident [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

In prosecution for making false statement in matter within jurisdiction of federal agency, defendant's prior conviction for making false statements to Labor Department investigator was properly admitted since it was relevant to defendant's state of mind in making allegedly false statements to U.S. Probation Office which he put in issue by claiming there was innocent explanation for his conduct. United States v Inserra (1994, CA2 NY) 34 F3d 83.

Evidence of defendant's prior similar acts in transporting cocaine was properly admitted as probative of part of concerted activity and in furtherance of scheme to transport cocaine, and not mere coincidence, accident, or mistake. United States v Montoya-Ortiz (1993, CA5 Tex) 7 F3d 1171, reh den (CA5) 1993 US App LEXIS 34648.

In prosecution for fraudulent sale of lottery device distributorships, district court properly permitted government to introduce evidence that defendant owed $2 million in unpaid taxes since relevance of amount made it more probable that defendant, whose defense was that he never willfully evaded any of his obligations, willfully evaded his tax obligation, rather than its being result of simple mistake. United States v Roberts (1994, CA7 Ind) 22 F3d 744, 94 TNT 96-22, reh, en banc, den (1994, CA7 Ind) 1994 US App LEXIS 16671.

Testimony that witness and defendant had grown marijuana in same location where defendant was arrested was properly admitted to show absence of mistake or accident since defendant claimed that he wandered into marijuana garden while hunting for deer and stated that he had never before been there. United States v Huels (1994, CA7 Ill) 31 F3d 476.

Evidence that past owner of airline company, charged with being person responsible for paying company's federal withholding taxes, controlled which bills were paid was not evidence of prior bad acts but evidence of opportunity to control which debts were paid, absence of mistake as to which debts were paid, and attention to which debts were paid. Phillips v United States IRS (1996, CA9 Hawaii) 73 F3d 939, 96 CDOS 243, 96 Daily Journal DAR 356, CCH Unemployment Ins Rep ¶ 15083B, 96-1 USTC ¶ 50057, 77 AFTR 2d 96-379.

In professional athlete's suit against defendants for, inter alia, fraud, in their representation of plaintiff as agent and financial advisor, testimony of other professional athletes concerning investment transactions between themselves and defendants during same time period was relevant for purpose of attempting to prove continuity element of alleged RICO violation since fraud was strikingly similar to that perpetrated on other investors; it was also admissible to demonstrate motive, opportunity, intent, preparation, plan, knowledge, identity, or absence of mistake or accident. Jones v Childers (1994, CA11 Fla) 18 F3d 899, RICO Bus Disp Guide (CCH) ¶ 8529, 8 FLW Fed C 89.

The trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting evidence regarding defendant's prior acts in engaging in excessive conduct with other co-employees and his reputation created thereby in an action for damages from an injury suffered during a movie stunt where plaintiff alleged willful and wanton, negligent and reckless conduct by defendant. The evidence was probative of defendant's motive, intent and the absence of mistake and was admissible under N.C.G.S. § 8C-1, Rule 404(b). Pinckney v Van Damme (1994) 116 NC App 139, 447 SE2d 825.

In a prosecution for possession with intent to distribute crack, evidence concerning defendant's prior arrest for distributing crack was admissible to rebut defendant's argument that he had merely picked up someone else's gym bag by mistake. United States v Rogers, 287 US App DC 1, 918 F2d 207, 31 Fed Rules Evid Serv 1343.

In a homicide case in which the victim's body, defendant's wife, had not been found, evidence of defendant's history of violence toward his wife and statement that he would kill her were properly admitted as probative of defendant's intent, preparation, and development of crime charged, as well as to establish that his wife's death was not accidental or suicidal. Government of Virgin Islands v Harris (CA3 VI) 938 F2d 401, 33 Fed Rules Evid Serv 598.

(6). To Show Preparation or Plan [448-451]

§ 448 Generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Evidence of the defendant's other crimes or acts is generally admitted to prove "plan" or "preparation," as those terms are used in Rule 404(b), 5 where the other crimes or acts are so inextricably blended or intertwined with the charged offense that proof of the other crimes or acts tends to prove the charged offense or explain the circumstances of it, 6 or where the other similar crimes or acts are independent of the offense charged but demonstrate a continuing plan, scheme, or conspiracy including that offense. 7

In other words, the law permits proof of a plan or scheme to commit a series of crimes including the one for which the accused is being tried, and, as tending to show the existence of such plan or scheme, it allows testimony of the commission of crimes other than the one charged, but so related in character, time, and place of commission as to tend to support the conclusion that there was a plan or system that embraced both them and the crime that is charged. 8

Where one crime is committed to prepare the way for another, and the commission of the second crime is made to depend upon the perpetration of the first, the two become connected and related transactions, and proof of the commission of the first offense becomes relevant to show the motive for the perpetration of the second. 9 Thus, testimony concerning an identical scheme involving the defendant prior to the period involved in the offense charged is admissible, 10 as is evidence to show that the crime charged consisted of several stages or continuous acts, all constituting one transaction. 11

But testimony connecting a defendant with several prior identical offenses, for the purpose of showing intent and plan, is not admissible where the only disputed issue is identity, 12 unless there is something distinctive about the unknown person or the manner in which such person committed such offenses. 13

◆ Observation: Some courts consider the defendant's "modus operandi" as part of, or closely related to a scheme or plan. 14 But more generally, the term "modus operandi" suggest that since the defendant acted in a similar and unusual or distinctive manner previously, it is more likely that he, rather than someone else, did the act on the occasion of the charged crime, so that the inference is from modus operandi to the "identity" of defendant as the culprit. 15

§ 448 ----Generally [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

The trial court did not err in an attempted rape and first-degree murder prosecution by admitting evidence of another rape to show identity on the theory of common scheme or plan. State v Carter (1994) 338 NC 569, 451 SE2d 157.

Chain-of-events evidence about defendant's escape from an Alabama prison and thefts he committed after his escape and before he committed the two murders at issue was properly admitted to establish defendant's intent and motive for the murders, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion by finding this evidence more probative than prejudicial. G.S. § 8C-1, Rules 403 and 404(b). State v Rose (1994) 339 NC 172, 451 SE2d 211.

Evidence of defendant's shooting of his former girlfriend at the time of their breakup and his conviction and sentence arising out of that shooting was admissible to show the chain of events that led to defendant's murder of his former girlfriend's new boyfriend just three months after their breakup and ten days after defendant's release from jail for the events surrounding their breakup. State v Ratliff (1995) 341 NC 610, 461 SE2d 325.

Marijuana and rolling papers were properly admitted in defendant's trial for felonious possession of cocaine, even though defendant had been acquitted of misdemeanor possession of the marijuana and paraphernalia, since the finding of the marijuana and rolling papers was linked in time and circumstances with the chain of events leading to defendant's arrest and formed an integral and natural part of an account of the crime of cocaine possession. State v Solomon (1995) 117 NC App 701, 453 SE2d 201, review den (NC) 1995 NC LEXIS 185.

§ 449 In drug cases

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

In prosecutions for possession of drugs or engaging in illegal drug transactions, evidence of prior drug offenses have frequently been held admissible to show preparation or plan.

16 Such evidence includes——evidence of prior acts of defendant with respect to narcotic transactions with a government witness. 17

—evidence of defendant's prior dealings with an informant involving purchases of marijuana. 18

—testimony that a defendant charged with distribution of drugs accumulated large amounts of money from his drug dealings and attempted to conceal these assets by utilizing aliases, corporations, and "straw men" to purchase property, admissible as demonstrating the defendant's scheme to conceal the proceeds of his drug trafficking. 19

—testimony concerning numerous previous cocaine transactions or arrangements for such transactions, in a prosecution for conspiracy to distribute cocaine, distribution of cocaine, and interstate travel for such purposes. 20

—evidence of prescriptions written by a physician charged with illegally prescribing controlled substances, even though those prescriptions were not listed as part of the basis for the charge. 21

—testimony of a coconspirator that defendant had sold him drugs 15 or 20 times. 22

—evidence of a lapse of four days between the extraneous offense of selling one-half ounce of cocaine and the charged offense of delivery of a controlled substance in the amount of 400 grams or more. 23

—evidence that defendant had previously been aboard a vessel upon which marijuana had been found. 24

—testimony of an unindicted coconspirator concerning a meeting one year earlier during which defendant had bought cocaine for distribution and at which defendant stated that he intended to start his own drug organization, in a prosecution for operating a continuing narcotics operation. 25

On the other hand, evidence of other narcotic transactions has been held inadmissible where the defendant had pleaded guilty to a charge of possessing drugs after the time covered by the indictment. 26 And evidence that defendant had five years earlier used cocaine with another member of alleged conspiracy did not amount to evidence of a plan to possess with intent to distribute. 27

§ 450 In sex crimes cases

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Evidence of other crimes, wrongs, or acts which has been admitted to show preparation or plan in connection with sex crimes includes—

—evidence that defendant had previously assaulted the victim. 28

—evidence of sexual assaults on other members of the same family. 29

—evidence of similar offense committed against another, in prosecution for deviate sexual assault, where women in both instances were attacked on apartment house elevators, defendant in both cases stopped elevators as a means of keeping his victims from escaping, searched both women and their clothing, including their bras, for money, etc. 30

—evidence by the alleged victim of an uncharged rape, that defendant had offered to give her a ride, had beaten and raped her, in a prosecution also involving offering of ride, beating and rape. 31

—evidence that the defendant had sexual intercourse with the prosecuting witness subsequently to the offense charged, in prosecution for committing indecent liberties upon a minor. 32

—evidence that the defendant threatened to kill his wife and her child if they left him, since it allowed defendant to continue his sexual abuse of the child. 33

But in some instances, evidence of prior sexual assaults have been held inadmissible as not showing a design or plan. 34 Thus, in some cases, evidence that a defendant indecently touched one victim on several occasions did not show a scheme or plan in relation to sexual intercourse and sodomy involving an entirely different individual. 35 And evidence of sexual acts or relations with a young female have been held not admissible in a prosecution involving fellatio of 15-year old boy. 36

§ 450 ----In sex crimes cases [SUPPLEMENT]

Rules:

(FRE, Rule 412(b)(1)(B)), amended in 1994, provides for evidence of past sexual behavior with the accused. As to rules allowing evidence of prior sexual assaults and child molestation, (Federal Rules of Evidence, Rules 413- 415), added by Congress in 1994; see § 404.

Case authorities:

There was no prejudice in a first- degree murder prosecution where the trial court admitted court files relating to defendant's prior conviction for assault. The files were admitted for the nonhearsay purpose of showing motive, intent and plan and witnesses testified that defendant broke into the victim's home and attacked her, that the victim prosecuted the defendant for the assault and trespass, that the defendant harassed and threatened the victim, and that the victim believed that the defendant was going to kill her. The files added little, if anything, to the State's case. State v Alston (1995) 341 NC 198, 461 SE2d 687.

There was no error in a prosecution for multiple counts of first- degree sexual offense and taking indecent liberties with a child in allowing one victim to testify concerning defendant's use of marijuana just before the abuse. When evidence leading up to a crime is part of the scenario which helps explain the setting, there is no error in permitting the jury to view the criminal episode in the context in which it happened. Furthermore, defendant did not object to another witness testifying that defendant smoked marijuana on several occasions. State v Parker (1995) 119 NC App 328, 459 SE2d 9.

In prosecution for aggravated rape of defendant's younger daughter, testimony of defendant's older daughter that defendant molested her during same period was admissible to show systematic plan, opportunity, and motive. State v Boudreaux (1995, La App 5th Cir) 662 So 2d 22.

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Evidence of other crimes, wrongs, or acts which has been admitted to show preparation or plan in connection with various offenses charged includes—

—evidence of uncharged robberies involving similar plan of operation. 37

—testimony by an accomplice in a prosecution for bank robbery as to prior trips to other states with the defendant for the purpose of bank robberies that were not carried out. 38

—testimony by a police officer that a defendant in a bank robbery prosecution, when questioned concerning the source of funds for the defendant's purchase of an automobile shortly after the robbery, stated that he bought it with the proceeds from gambling and stealing. 39

—a forged marriage certificate, lease agreement, and military discharge forms as proof of motive, intent, preparation, plan, or knowledge in a trial for conspiracy to make and sell false documents of citizenship. 40

—evidence of an illegal transporting incident four years prior to the charged offense, in a prosecution for conspiracy and aiding and abetting the smuggling of illegal aliens, in order to show defendant's common plan, preparation, and intent to transport aliens. 41

—a mask, wig, and rubber gloves found in defendant's van, as was relevant to show defendant's plan and preparation with respect to crimes involving using disguises. 42

—testimony, in a prosecution for commercial bribery, that while the defendant was fraudulently endorsing checks for the purpose of the bribery charged in the instant case, he was authorizing his salespeople to bribe other traffic managers by the same illegal method, and thus that the defendant masterminded an extensive scheme of commercial bribery of which the bribery charged in the instant case was a part. 43

—tape recordings of defendant's telephone calls, admissible in a prosecution for making threatening telephone calls, to demonstrate a continuing pattern of threatening calls. 44

—testimony, in an action by an independent insurance agency against an insurance company alleging breach of an oral agreement and tortious misconduct, by a former insurance agent, that one year after the plaintiff was terminated, the defendant terminated the agent for the purpose of diverting business that had gone through that agent to the defendant's affiliate, the evidence being introduced to show a general plan to close out unaffiliated agents for the purpose of channeling business through the defendant's own affiliate. 45

—testimony as to a witness' past collection activities for the defendants, very similar to those charged, to show a consistent pattern of conduct over the entire time. 46

—testimony by the defendant's confederate as to how the defendant and a third person stole, cashed, and split the proceeds of government checks, in a prosecution for possession of stolen checks. 47

—evidence of the defendant's theft of timber, in a prosecution for tax evasion, to show the plan by which the taxes were evaded. 48

—testimony that defendant had indicated a desire to insure their lives, as part of a fraud and conspiracy in which a "front man" would create a partnership with a businessman, obtain key man and accidental death insurance on the businessman, and then cause the businessman's death to collect the insurance. 49

—evidence concerning defendant's poisoning of four other individuals and defendant's forging and uttering forged checks, in a prosecution for poisoning a man with whom she lived, to show that a continuing plan or scheme existed whereby defendant used the proceeds of her forgeries to support her drug addiction, and then murdered her victims when the forgeries were discovered or she feared discovery. 50

But in a prosecution for criminal possession of stolen property, where defendant came into possession of an automobile a very short time after it was stolen, evidence concerning thefts of other stolen vehicles allegedly committed by persons other than defendant should not have been admitted, since, despite strong similarities among the thefts relating to time, place, and circumstance, there was no proof that the common plan or scheme, if one existed, included the defendant. 51

§ 451 ----In other particular cases [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

There was no prejudice in a first- degree murder prosecution where the trial court admitted court files relating to defendant's prior conviction for assault. The files were admitted for the nonhearsay purpose of showing motive, intent and plan and witnesses testified that defendant broke into the victim's home and attacked her, that the victim prosecuted the defendant for the assault and trespass, that the defendant harassed and threatened the victim, and that the victim believed that the defendant was going to kill her. The files added little, if anything, to the State's case. State v Alston (1995) 341 NC 198, 461 SE2d 687.

In a prosecution for 2 murders in which a rape victim and others were permitted to testify about the rape incident for the limited purpose of establishing a common scheme, plan or design, the fact that the 3 attacks were spread over a 5 year period did not render the rape too remote to show a common scheme, plan or design given the striking similarity of the 3 incidents. Commonwealth v Miller (1995, Pa) 664 A2d 1310, petition for certiorari filed (Nov 21, 1995).

In a prosecution for 2 murders in which a rape victim and others were permitted to testify about the rape incident for the limited purpose of establishing a common scheme, plan or design, the court would reject the contention that the testimony about the rape had no probative value and only served to inflame the jury against him as he did not deny the killings and only challenged the degree of murder since a review of the record showed that the defendant pleaded not guilty and challenged the voluntariness of all statements in which he admitted to committing the crimes. Commonwealth v Miller (1995, Pa) 664 A2d 1310, petition for certiorari filed (Nov 21, 1995).

In a prosecution for 2 murders in which a rape victim and others were permitted to testify about the rape incident for the limited purpose of establishing a common scheme, plan or design, the prosecution properly restricted its references to the rape to the issue of common scheme and only mentioned the rape incident 5 times in a 14 page closing argument, again properly limiting those references to comparison between the crimes to establish a common scheme. Commonwealth v Miller (1995, Pa) 664 A2d 1310, petition for certiorari filed (Nov 21, 1995).

In a prosecution for 2 murders in which a rape victim and others were permitted to testify about the rape incident for the limited purpose of establishing a common scheme, plan or design, the court took proper precautions during both the guilt phase and the penalty phase of trial to limit the prejudicial impact of the evidence where the court gave limiting instructions both prior to the rape victim's testimony and in the jury charge that the evidence was only to be considered by the jury for the limited purpose of establishing common scheme, plan or design and also ruled that the evidence was inadmissible in the sentencing phase. Commonwealth v Miller (1995, Pa) 664 A2d 1310, petition for certiorari filed (Nov 21, 1995).

In a prosecution for 2 murders in which a rape victim and others were permitted to testify about the rape incident for the limited purpose of establishing a common scheme, plan or design, the mother of one of the victims was properly permitted to testify that the victim was tall and had always been a little heavy and that she was 8 1/2 months pregnant at the time she disappeared since the pregnancy helped to establish a physical characteristic shared by the murder victims and the rape victim, i.e., that they were all tall, heavy black women. Commonwealth v Miller (1995, Pa) 664 A2d 1310, petition for certiorari filed (Nov 21, 1995).

In a prosecution for 2 murders to which the defendant confessed after he was arrested in connection with a rape, the rape victim and others were properly permitted to testify about the rape incident for the limited purpose of establishing a common scheme, plan or design and, thus, to establish that the defendant was the person who committed the murders and to establish that he had the requisite mental state to commit first degree murder. Commonwealth v Miller (1995, Pa) 664 A2d 1310, petition for certiorari filed (Nov 21, 1995).

While remoteness in time is a factor to be considered in determining the probative value of other crimes evidence where the prosecution seeks to show a common scheme, plan or design, the importance of the time period is inversely proportional to the similarity of the crimes at issue. Commonwealth v Miller (1995, Pa) 664 A2d 1310, petition for certiorari filed (Nov 21, 1995).

(7). To Establish Identity or "Modus Operandi" [452-457]

§ 452 Showing identity, generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Under the Rules, evidence of other crimes, wrongs, or acts may be admissible for the purpose of proving identity. 52

◆ Observation: It has been noted that although "identity" is expressly listed in Rule 404(b), it would seem that "identity" can mean little more than the logical conclusion which flows from other crimes evidence advanced in proof of plan, design, scheme or modus operandi. 53

The federal and uniform rule conforms to the long-established practice of admitting evidence of other crimes where the sole purpose of such evidence is to establish identity and the evidence is relevant to that issue. 54 The probative value of evidence of other crimes, wrongs, or acts where the issue is identity depends upon the extent to which it raises the inference that the perpetrator of the other offenses was the perpetrator of the charged offense. 55 According to some authorities, for evidence of other crimes to be admissible on the issue of the identity of the person who committed the charged offense, the evidence must be so unusual and distinctive as to be like a signature. 56 But there is contrary authority to the effect that it is not required that evidence constitute a "signature" or otherwise demonstrate a particular, identical "modus operandi" in order to be admissible under Rule 404(b). 57 The inference of identity need not depend on one or more unique or nearly unique common features; features of substantial but lesser distinctiveness may yield a distinctive combination when considered together. 58 On the other hand, if characteristics of both a prior offense and the charged offense are not in any way distinctive, but are similar to numerous other crimes committed by persons other than the defendant, no inference of identity can arise. 59

Evidence of the commission of another crime is not properly admitted simply for the purpose of identifying the accused unless it is absolutely necessary to establish identification as an element of the crime, 60 although it has also been held that unless the defendant's identity is conclusively established, evidence of other crimes is admissible to prove identity. 61

Identity is not in issue so as to justify admission of other crimes evidence where a victim does not testify that he is the victim of a crime committed by somebody and that he believes that the defendant was the perpetrator, but rather where the matter in issue is whether the defendant did the acts complained of by the victim at all. 62 Generally speaking, it is only where the identity of the accused is not definitely connected with the offense on trial that other offenses may be introduced to connect and identify him with the case on trial. 63 If the identity of the accused is established by other evidence and is therefore no longer an issue, it is improper to admit evidence of other crimes on the theory of proving identity. 64

§ 452 ----Showing identity, generally [SUPPLEMENT]

Practice Aids: The mark of a killer: Use of other crimes evidence to prove identity in State v. Johnson [832 P.2d 443 (Or. 1992)], 29 Will LR 927 (1993).

Case authorities:

Evidence of two subsequent bank robberies was improperly admitted to prove identity of defendants in bank robberies charged since common features of each were largely generic and although government promise that evidence would reveal that all robberies were characterized by neat, two-man division of labor, robberies involved different numbers of perpetrators. United States v Luna (1994, CA9 Cal) 21 F3d 874, 94 CDOS 2393, 94 Daily Journal DAR 4546, amd (CA9 Cal) 94 CDOS 3187, 94 Daily Journal DAR 6061.

In prosecution for kidnapping and burglary, trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting evidence of 1983 sexual-abuse incident involving defendant resulting in defendant's conviction of burglary, where evidence was relevant to establish defendant's identity, and similarities between 1983 incident and present incident were sufficiently distinctive to support admission of evidence. State v Ripperger (1994, Iowa App) 514 NW2d 740.

The trial court did not err in a murder and assault prosecution where defendant Cureton contended that he was unfairly prejudiced by the amount of time the State devoted to developing a prior shooting incident, but the State questioned only one eyewitness to the prior shooting and the other testimony was to describe the chain of custody and examination of the casings found at the scene. The evidence was admissible for identification and its purpose was not to show defendant Cureton's character. State v Abraham (1994) 338 NC 315, 451 SE2d 131.

The trial court did not err in a prosecution for a first-degree murder committed in 1989 by admitting evidence of an assault committed by defendant in 1981, when he was thirteen, where there were unusual facts and strikingly similar acts in both crimes so as to permit admission of the 1981 assault for purposes of proving identity. Because the prior crime here is offered to show to show identity rather than common plan or scheme, the passage of time in this case affects the weight of the evidence rather than its admissibility. The probative value of the evidence outweighs any potential for unfair prejudice because the identity of the perpetrator was a critical issue at trial. State v Carter (1994) 338 NC 569, 451 SE2d 157.

The trial court did not err in a first- degree murder prosecution by allowing evidence of a prior shooting involving defendants where the evidence was offered under G.S. § 8C-1, Rule 404(b) to prove the identity of the assailants in this shooting. Defendant conceded that the two months between the prior act and the current offenses meets the temporal proximity test, but contended that the acts were not sufficiently similar; however, the casings recovered from the shootings matched and witnesses on both occasions identified defendants in a blue Cadillac on a Charlotte Street before they began the respective assaults. The similarities were sufficient to be probative on the issue of the identity of the assailants in the instant case. State v Abraham (1994) 338 NC 315, 451 SE2d 131.

There was no error in a first- degree murder and attempted rape prosecution where the court admitted evidence of a prior assault and defendant contended that the court improperly instructed the jury as to the purpose of the evidence by failing to specify the charged offense for which the evidence could be considered. The prior crime was relevant on the issue of the identity of the assailant as to both offenses. State v Carter (1994) 338 NC 569, 451 SE2d 157.

An officer's testimony that a defendant charged with drug offenses had fled from him on an earlier occasion was not evidence of other crimes, wrongs or acts within the purview of GS § 8C-1, Rule 404(b). Even if defendant's flight from the officer was a prior bad act under Rule 404(b), this testimony was admissible to show that the officer was able to identify defendant. State v Taylor (1995) 117 NC App 644, 453 SE2d 225.

§ 453 --In particular cases

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Evidence of other crimes, wrongs, or acts which has been held admissible on the issue of identity includes—

—evidence of counterfeiting activities by defendant on other occasions. 65

—evidence of additional forged instruments, similar in most respects to those charged in an indictment and containing the defendant's fingerprint, to rebut a defense that the defendant was framed. 66

—testimony by a gun store employee that he was able to identify and recall the physical appearance of the defendant because of previous police inquiries into her purchases, in a prosecution for furnishing false information in connection with the acquisition of ammunition. 67

—testimony by an FBI agent that only two out of 1,800 bank robberies in the Los Angeles area involved persons wearing bandannas, since the fact that very few robberies involved such clothing made it more likely that the same person committed both robberies. 68

—evidence that a gun stolen during a robbery and burglary was used by defendant in a break-in at another location some eight days later. 69

—testimony by a bank teller at a bank that was robbed the same morning as the robbery charged in the instant case, identifying the defendants in the instant case as the men who robbed her bank and giving descriptions of the general appearance and clothing worn by the robbers of that bank that matched the descriptions given of the men who committed the bank robbery charged in the instant case. 70

—evidence of an extraneous aggravated robbery committed 11 days before the offense charged in the indictment where both offenses were committed in restaurants located on the same freeway, where both offenses took place at night but during business hours, and where the accused was positively identified as one of the co-actors in each offense and was described as having facial hair, wearing a cap, and brandishing a pistol in his right hand which he kept in the left side of his belt or pants waistband. 71

—evidence of defendant's expertise with burglar alarms, in a prosecution for sale of the fruits of theft, where identification was the main issue and knowledge of bypassing burglar alarm systems was a distinctive feature of the burglary evidence, which corroborated testimony of two witnesses whose credibility the defendant had attacked. 72

—evidence as to the defendant's prior entries into a business premises, in a prosecution for unlawfully attempting to rescue property on the premises seized by the Internal Revenue Service. 73

—a photograph of defendant holding a pistol, in a prosecution for using or carrying a firearm during and in relation to drug trafficking where one of the issues to be determined at trial was the connection between guns seized at various apartments and the defendant. 74

—evidence that the government's chief witness had been hired by the defendant to commit other crimes in addition to the charged offense of extortion, as probative of the identity of the witness' employer when the witness was hired for extortion collection. 75

—a tape recording of a prior telephone bomb threat in the defendant's voice, in a prosecution for making a false bomb threat. 76

—evidence of threatening letters written by defendant, in a prosecution for making a threatening phone call, since the letters and call concerned the same obscure litigation and threatened the same four public officials. 77

—evidence of one defendant's participation in hijackings, in a prosecution of four defendants arising from a hijacking, where the prior hijacking occurred at the same place, and the stolen goods were disposed of in the same location, as in the offense charged. 78

—evidence that the defendant took out a driver's license using a false name, to show that it was the defendant who used that name in making telephone calls as part of an alleged conspiracy. 79

—a tool, found in the defendant's home, which was commonly used to start stolen cars, the defendants having escaped from the charged bank robbery in a stolen car that had been started using such a tool. 80

—evidence that defendant sold an ounce of cocaine to an undercover government agent before the charged conspiracy began, where defendant responded to a particular beeper number which a coconspirator paged during the course of the conspiracy. 81

—evidence that defendant spent nearly $1 million after his niece's death as tending to show that he, rather than someone else, received and disbursed virtually all the proceeds from life insurance policies on his niece and that he was responsible for incomplete and inaccurate answers that riddled insurance applications for policies he purchased. 82

—evidence of subsequent sex related crimes where the pattern of the other offenses was similar to the offense with which the defendant was charged. 83

On the other hand, where the alleged similarities between the offense charged and previous offenses sought to be introduced in evidence are common to a substantial portion of the population of child molesters, including the use of charm or deception, transportation to places of privacy, and violence, and there was no peculiar pattern in defendant's past conduct that established his identity as a kidnapper and killer by setting him apart from the general class of violent sex offenders against children, it was error to admit such evidence on the question of the identity of a girl's abductor and killer. 84

§ 453 --In particular cases [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

There was no error in a first- degree murder prosecution where the trial court admitted evidence that defendant had bought forty to forty-five dollars' worth of crack cocaine with quarters, dimes and nickels where the victim's mother had testified that the victim worked at a restaurant and received a large quantity of change from tips, that the victim had over one hundred dollars in quarters in a jar in her bedroom the night before her death, and that the jar was empty when she found the victim. The testimony was strong circumstantial evidence tending to show that defendant murdered the victim and stole her tip money from the jar in the bedroom and was relevant, admissible, and clearly not introduced for the purpose of showing that the defendant was a drug user. State v Alston (1995) 341 NC 198, 461 SE2d 687.

The prosecutor's argument to the jury in a prosecution for the murder of a child, "Now, who acts with malice, who bends arms, who hits, who chokes, who acts with malice? There he sits," was not an improper misstatement of law that jurors could infer defendant's identity as the perpetrator from his malicious character but was a proper reference to the fact that the jury could consider evidence of defendant's prior acts on the issue of identity. State v Burr (1995) 341 NC 263, 461 SE2d 602.

In a prosecution of defendant for the first-degree murder of a four-month-old child, testimony by the child's mother and by others concerning defendant's misconduct toward the mother by choking her, bruising various parts of her body with his hands and fingers, and bending her hands behind her back to make her say and do whatever he wanted was admissible under Rule 404(b) to show defendant's identity as the perpetrator of the crime charged where the evidence showed that, at the time of her death, the child victim was covered with bruises similar to those inflicted by defendant upon the mother, including bruises in the shape of fingerprints on the cheek and handprints on the neck; the child suffered fractures in both legs caused by the knees being bent forward; the child suffered fractures in both shoulders inflicted by the arms being bent backward; and the unusual injuries inflicted on the victim were thus particularly similar to those inflicted by defendant upon the mother and the unusual acts which would have caused the victim's injuries were particularly similar to those acts defendant committed against the mother. The probative value of this testimony outweighed any potential for unfair prejudice against defendant. Furthermore, assuming that testimony concerning defendant's threats to kill the mother for infidelity and his pointing of a gun at her was not competent to show identity, the admission of this testimony was harmless error in light of other competent evidence tending to show that defendant was the perpetrator of the murder. GS § 8C-1, Rule 404(b). State v Burr (1995) 341 NC 263, 461 SE2d 602.

There was no error in a first- degree murder prosecution arising from an armed robbery where the court admitted testimony that a crowd gathered at a club eleven days after the murder, one of the crowd became belligerent, defendant approached the crowd and asked who was causing the trouble, the belligerent individual advanced on defendant, defendant fired several shots over his head, the crowd dispersed, defendant dropped the pistol as he was running from the scene, and the gun was recovered and identified as having been used in the murder. Defendant concedes that his having dropped the pistol which was possibly used as the murder weapon was admissible, but contends that the evidence that he fired over a person's head was irrelevant. This was not prejudicial; it shows that defendant was not the aggressor and that he acted to protect himself and other people. State v Grace (1995) 341 NC 640, 461 SE2d 330.

§ 454 --Where defense claims alibi or misidentification

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

A defense of alibi puts the identity of the defendant in a criminal action squarely in issue, and evidence of another crime or act which is relevant to that issue is therefore admissible. 85 To counter an alibi set up by one accused of crime, evidence is admissible that he was seen in the vicinity of the crime at about the time it was committed, although at the time when seen he was engaged in the commission of other crimes. 86

Evidence that the accused had been misidentified in connection with a crime similar to the one charged has also been held admissible on the ground that such evidence tends to show that someone other than defendant committed the crime charged. 87

§ 455 Showing "modus operandi," generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Although Rule 404(b) does not list "modus operandi" as one of the matters for which evidence of other crimes or acts may be introduced, it is generally recognized that where prior crimes or acts of the accused are unique or unusual, and strikingly similar in nature to the crime charged, or very close in detailed resemblance to the crime charged, then such crimes may be proven and the trier allowed to infer that the accused is probably the culprit. 88

◆ Distinction: While "common plan" 89 and "modus operandi" are sometimes used interchangeably, the concepts are distinguishable since "modus operandi" (that is, the common method of committing a crime) refers to patterns of criminal conduct in which the method of perpetration is so distinctive that separate crimes are recognizable as the handiwork of one person by a characteristic "signature." 90

Modus operandi is used not so much to prove that since the defendant apparently resolved to do the act, therefore he probably did it, as it is to suggest that since the defendant acted in a similar and unusual or distinctive manner previously, therefore it is more likely that the defendant (rather than someone else) did the act on the occasion of the charged crime. In other words, the inference is from modus operandi to the "identity" 91 of defendant as the culprit. 92

Where evidence of a prior crime is introduced to show the defendant's modus operandi in carrying out the prior crime and by inference the crime charged in the instant case, the activity engaged in must be a sufficiently unique act to counterbalance the prejudice arising from any inference of involvement in uncharged crimes. 93 A prior or subsequent crime or other incident is not admissible for the purpose of proving modus operandi merely because it is similar, but only if it bears such a high degree of similarity as to mark it as the handiwork of the accused. 94 This type of testimony is properly excluded from the government's direct case where the probative value of evidence as modus operandi testimony is clearly outweighed by its prejudicial effect on a defendant's character defense. 95

◆ Practice guide: Admission of evidence of a prior similar crime under Federal Rules of Evidence 404(b) for the limited purpose of proving identity or modus operandi is not conditioned upon the defendant's taking the stand. 96

§ 455 ----Showing "modus operandi", generally [SUPPLEMENT]

In prosecution for operating automobile chop shop, receiving stolen vehicles, and altering vehicle identification numbers, evidence of defendant's possession of other stolen vehicles not charged in indictment was relevant to his knowledge of character of stolen vehicles charged, and demonstrated his modus operandi and scheme for retagging stolen vehicles listed in indictment. United States v Evans (1994, CA7 Ind) 27 F3d 1219.

In prosecution for child molestation of 11-year-old girl, trial court did not err in admitting similar transaction evidence without making determination required in case precedent, where pretrial hearing was conducted pursuant to state's notice of intent to use similar transaction evidence and, at that hearing, trial court determined that alleged similar activities involved children of same age as victim and from same area of residence and that evidence would go to establish demeanor, motive, and modus operandi—trial court's determination implicitly included all elements required by precedent. Cornelius v State (1994) 213 Ga App 766, 445 SE2d 800.

Go to Supplement

Evidence of other crimes, wrongs, or acts which has been admitted to show modus operandi includes—

—a defendant's admission of 15 other bank robberies where, by his own statements, he had a distinct modus operandi, which was practically a signature to his robberies. 97

—evidence that defendant engaged in a prior bank robbery, since both the prior and the charged offenses involved an oral request for change for a $5 bill followed by an oral demand for money. 98

—evidence of a prior bank robbery where each crime involved a pistol, a warning against using dye packs, a getaway car, and a police scanner. 99

—evidence that defendant had robbed other three banks and in each instance had threatened a bank teller with a toy gun hidden inside a newspaper. 1

—evidence of an attempted grocery store break-in, in a prosecution for bank robbery, where both offenses occurred in small rural communities in the early morning hours, and prior to breaking into buildings, perpetrators in each case cut lines leading to the buildings' security systems. 2

—evidence of a prior uncharged robbery, which resembled the transactions in instant case in distinctive details, including the use of walkie-talkies and duct tape to bind victims in the same way. 3

—evidence of the defendant's participation in a subsequent drug deal transacted in the same manner as those covered by the indictment. 4

—evidence of ammunition found in a narcotics defendant's bedroom, since the government's expert witness informed the jury that those who deal in drugs typically keep firearms for protection and the government introduced the ammunition to prove that defendant was engaged in the trade. 5

—evidence of the accused's involvement in prior arson incidents under similar circumstances. 6

—evidence that the defendant had participated in a previous kidnapping using plans, methods, and techniques identical to those used in the kidnapping and extortion charged in the instant case. 7

—evidence that defendant had similarly beaten, raped, and forced three other young women into prostitution, in a prosecution for kidnapping and illegal transportation of women in interstate commerce for purposes of prostitution. 8

—evidence that a sexual assault defendant had regularly assaulted his daughter in the past, and had threatened her with physical harm and death, to establish defendant's modus operandi in overcoming a victim's will by putting her in fear of harm. 9

—evidence of a similar offense committed against another, in a prosecution for deviate sexual assault, where the crimes shared strikingly similar characteristics, in that both women were attacked on apartment house elevators, the perpetrator in both cases stopped the elevators as means of keeping his victims from escaping, and searched both women and their clothing, including their bras. 10

—evidence of a prior act of smuggling statues through airport and avoiding customs, in a prosecution for kidnapping and murdering a foreign money courier as he entered the U.S., to show that he could have done the same with the victim. 11

—evidence that defendant was apprehended the day after the charged offense (transporting stolen money orders in interstate commerce), trying to pass money orders identical in amount, payee, and payor, and bearing numbers following sequentially those cashed on the occasion alleged in the instant case. 12

—evidence of crimes of which the defendant was previously convicted which were strikingly similar to the ones with which he was charged in the instant case, in that each incident involved a bizarre extortion attempt based on the poisoning of a food item in a store and a subsequent demand for diamonds to forestall further poisonings. 13

—evidence, in a counterfeiting prosecution, that process used to make the bills at issue was a unique one, that it had been encountered only once before in the experience of the Secret Service, and that on that prior occasion the perpetrator was the defendant. 14

§ 456 --Admissibility in particular cases [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

In prosecution for incest, trial court properly admitted evidence of seven other incidents of improper sexual contact with victim over period of 10 years, where similar-transaction evidence is admissible in sexual assault cases to show plan, scheme, design, modus operandi, motive, or guilty knowledge, if evidence relates to material fact in case, if evidence is logically relevant to material fact, if logical relevance is independent of prohibited inference that defendant committed crime charged because of his criminal propensities, and if probative value of evidence substantially outweighs danger of unfair prejudice. People v Leonard (1993, Colo App) 872 P2d 1325, cert den (Colo) 1994 Colo LEXIS 395.

Evidence of defendant's participation in a robbery an hour before the robbery and two murders for which defendant was on trial was admissible under Rule 404(b) to show defendant's identity as a perpetrator of the murders where, in both the prior robbery and the crimes against the murder victims, there were at least two individuals involved who incapacitated the victims by pulling their clothing down around their elbows and hands, and at least one person was robbed during both events. The evidence tended to show that defendant punched the prior robbery victim in the face and that the male murder victim had "areas of abrasion and bruising on his face"; and the similar acts and close proximity in time thus tend to indicate that the same person was involved in both the prior robbery and the murders. Furthermore, the probative value of defendant's involvement in the prior robbery outweighs any potential for unfair prejudice. GS § 8C-1, Rules 404(b), 403. State v Goode (1995) 341 NC 513, 461 SE2d 631.

In prosecution for sexual indecency with child, evidence that defendant committed prior acts of sexual misconduct with same child victim was admissible in order to rebut defendant's evidence as to his sterling character and in order to show that defendant was acting in conformity with his established habit in relationship to 5-year-old to 10-year-old boy victim. Waddell v State (1994, Tex App Beaumont) 873 SW2d 130.

§ 457 --Inadmissibility in particular cases

In accordance with the rule that to be admissible as evidence of "modus operandi," the other crimes or acts sought to be introduced must be unique or strikingly similar, 15 evidence of other acts or crimes are frequently found inadmissible on the ground that the requirement of uniqueness or "signature" has not been demonstrated. Thus, evidence of other crimes, wrongs, or acts which has been excluded when offered to show modus operandi includes——evidence that defendant had taken other bribes, in a prosecution for receiving bribes, since the other bribes were not part of a unique scheme so unusual as to earmark them as the handiwork of the accused. 16

—defendant's admission that he had robbed a drug dealer, using a knife, about three months before the charged robbery of a postal installation at knifepoint. 17

—evidence of a prior marijuana violation absent a peculiar similarity between the violation and the charged conspiracy to distribute marijuana. 18

—testimony that the accused had participated with the witness in other bank robberies, where the other robberies did not indicate a common plan and were not similar enough to the charged crime to indicate a "signature." 19

—testimony about the defendant's purchase of a yacht four days prior to his arrest for importing and possessing marijuana, as this was not a sufficiently unique act to counterbalance the prejudice arising from the inference that defendant was in the business of smuggling, a crime with which he was not charged. 20

—a photograph showing defendant standing nude with a minor female, in a trial for conduct involving fellatio of a 15-year old boy. 21

§ 457 --Inadmissibility in particular cases [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

In prosecution for lewd and lascivious conduct with child, trial court erred in admitting evidence of allegation of defendant's touching another minor 1 month prior to charged act, where act was not part of continuous series of sexual acts with one victim and was not so distinctive and unique as to constitute defendant's "signature." State v Perrillo (1994, Vt) 649 A2d 1031.

Footnote 17. United States v Pisari (CA1 Mass) 636 F2d 855, 7 Fed Rules Evid Serv 552, finding evidence not admissible under FRE 404(b) as proof of identity or modus operandi because the precedents require the conjunction of several identifying characteristics or the presence of some highly distinctive quality. Here, there was no evidence whether the knives used on these occasions were either similar or distinctive; there was no evidence of the propinquity of the events in time; in one case a store was the target of the crime, in the other, an individual; in one case, there were two robbers, in the other, one; in one case the objects taken were drugs and money; in the other, it was not clear whether drugs or money were taken.

Footnote 19. United States v Phillips (CA6 Ky) 599 F2d 134, 4 Fed Rules Evid Serv 984.

Evidence that defendant committed a prior bank robbery should not have been admitted as proof of identity or modus operandi where, even though the prior robbery had common features with the charged robbery (lone gunman, use of handgun, lack of disguise, proximity in time), these similarities did not amount to a "signature"; there were more striking dissimilarities, since in earlier crime, defendant used dynamite as the main weapon, posed as a businessman, and took a hostage. United States v Lail (CA11 Fla) 846 F2d 1299, 25 Fed Rules Evid Serv 1213.

d. Procedural Matters [458-462]

§ 458 Time for admitting Rule 404(b) evidence

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Evidence of other crimes, wrongs, or acts may be offered during the presentation of a party's case in chief ²² and also during rebuttal, ²³ if advance notice has been given to the defendant. ²⁴ If the requirements of Federal Rules of Evidence 404(b) are satisfied, evidence of past bad acts can be admitted on rebuttal for impeachment by contradiction, after the defendant has denied the misconduct on cross-examination, even though its admission violates the letter of Federal Rules of Evidence 608(b), which prohibits a party from offering extrinsic evidence to prove specific instances of conduct for the purpose of attacking or supporting a witness' credibility. ²⁵

◆ Practice guide: If the government attempts to introduce bad acts through cross-examination of the defendant or on rebuttal, the trial court should determine whether the evidence is cumulative or necessary to prove an essential element of the crime charged. If the evidence is cumulative, the trial court should more closely scrutinize its prejudicial effect. If the evidence is necessary to prove an element of the charge, the trial judge may have erred in not sustaining a defendant's motion for a directed verdict of acquittal. Moreover, a defendant may have a valid objection under Federal Rules of Evidence 611(b) that the government's cross-examination exceeds the scope of the direct examination. 26

Federal Rules of Evidence 404(b) was not intended to preclude prejudicial inferences being drawn from prior bad or criminal acts of the defendant by the defendant himself, only by the government. 27 Where the defendant himself first offers evidence of a prior conviction while testifying on direct examination, he may not object to the government's subsequent inquiries into the relevant aspects of that prior conviction. 28 And where the defense invites an inference of prior bad conduct by asking leading questions of the witness, it may not complain about the government's inquiry into the matter. 29

One point of view is that it is usually preferable for the trial court to await the conclusion of the defendant's case before admitting evidence of other crimes, since by this time the court will best be able to judge the prosecutor's need for the evidence and weigh the probative value of the evidence against its prejudicial effect. 30 Another viewpoint, however, is that the better practice is for the prosecutor to introduce evidence of other bad acts in the government's case in chief, since in most instances such evidence will surface prior to trial on a motion in limine, at which time, on a proffer by the government, the trial court will determine whether the evidence is relevant and admissible under Federal Rules of Evidence 404(b) and whether the evidence is more probative than prejudicial. 31

When a government witness volunteers a reference to other offenses or acts by the defendant, Federal Rules of Evidence 404(b) is inapplicable if the government plays no active role and exercises no bad faith in soliciting such information. So long as the government makes no attempt to introduce or exploit such evidence for the purpose of reflecting upon the defendant's guilt, the reference made by the witness is not patently inculpatory, and any taint that might flow from such evidence could be cured by a cautionary instruction. 32

§ 459 Advance notice to defendant required

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Federal Rule 404(b) was amended in 1991 to provide that evidence of other crimes, wrongs, or acts may be admissible for other purposes, such as proof of motive, opportunity, intent, preparation, plan, knowledge, identity, or absence of mistake or accident, provided that upon request by the accused, the prosecution in a criminal case must provide reasonable notice in advance of trial, or during trial if the court excuses pretrial notice on good cause shown, of the general nature of any such evidence it intends to introduce at trial. 33

◆ Comment: The pretrial notice was intended to reduce surprise and promote early resolution on the issue of admissibility. No specific time limits are set in recognition of what constitutes a reasonable request will depend largely on the circumstances of each case. 34 Such notice provisions had previously been enacted in several states. 35

Notice requirements have been applied both by state courts, 36 and by federal courts prior to the adoption of the 1991 amendment. 37

§ 460 Effect of request for order in limine

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

A trial court may not allow the government to offer evidence of defendant's prior conviction on cross-examination, for the purpose of establishing motive or intent under Rule 404(b), where on a pretrial motion of defendant to prevent the use of prior convictions for impeachment purposes 38 the government had flatly denied any intention to use defendant's prior conviction by agreeing not to offer evidence of a prior felony conviction or cross-examine him as to that conviction. 39 But a trial court did not err in admitting evidence under Rule 404(b) after allegedly denying a motion in limine prior to trial, on a "cold" record and before being exposed to and having heard all the evidence, since the denial of the motion was a preliminary decision subject to change based upon the court's exposure to the evidence at the trial. 40

§ 461 Function of limiting instructions

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

When the trial court, in its discretion, finds that evidence is admissible under Federal Rules of Evidence 404(b), but its admission runs the risk of prejudice, 41 the court must be careful to instruct correctly as to the limited purpose for which such evidence is admitted, 42 and to make it clear that such evidence may be considered only for that limited purpose. 43 When evidence of other crimes is admitted for a proper purpose, a limiting instruction should be given to caution the jury against drawing an impermissible inference that the defendant is more likely to have committed the crime in question solely because of involvement in past crimes. 44

A trial judge may give such an instruction under Rule 404(b) sua sponte, notwithstanding that defendant is responsible for raising "other acts" evidence through cross-examination of a prosecution witness. 45 But a court's failure to instruct a jury as to the limited purpose of testimony relating to the past conduct of a defendant is not necessarily plain error requiring reversal in the absence of an objection by the defendant. 46

§ 462 Appellate review of rulings of admissibility under Rule 404(b)

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

When the admission of evidence of other crimes, wrongs, or acts is challenged on appeal, the duty of the appellate court is to assess its relevancy and probative value, and if such evidence is found relevant under Federal Rules of Evidence 404, the appellate court may not reverse the ruling of the District Court unless it finds the evidence so prejudicial that its probative value is outweighed. 47 The trial court's decision to admit evidence under Rule 404(b) is reviewed under an abuse of discretion standard. 48 Broad discretion is afforded the trial judge in deciding whether to admit wrongful act evidence, 49 and the judge's decision will not be overturned without a clear showing that the requirements of Federal Rules of Evidence 404(b) have not been met, 50 or that there has been a prejudicial abuse of discretion. 51

The decision of the trial judge is accorded great deference because his firsthand exposure to all the evidence and his familiarity with the course of the trial proceedings are the best qualifications available for evaluating the value of the evidence in its proper context. 52

◆ Practice guide: An objection to evidence of other crimes, wrongs, or acts on the ground that under Federal Rules of Evidence 403 the probative value of the evidence is substantially outweighed by its prejudicial effect should be sufficient to preserve for appeal the point that the evidence is not admissible under Federal Rules of Evidence 404(b). 53

4. Subsequent Remedial Measures (Rule 407) [463-479]

a. In General [463-472]

§ 463 General rule of inadmissibility

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

As a general rule, evidence of repairs, change of conditions, or precautions taken after an accident or injury, is not admissible as evidence or an admission of negligence before the accident. 54

The Rules specifically provide that when, after an event, measures are taken which, if taken previously, would have made the event less likely to occur, evidence of the subsequent measures is not admissible to prove negligent or culpable conduct in connection with the event. 55 The Rule does not require the exclusion of evidence of subsequent measures when offered for another purpose, such as proving ownership, control, or feasibility of precautionary measures, if controverted, or for impeachment purposes. 56

◆ Caution: Since a number of states that have adopted the Uniform Rules have made substantial changes in the language of Rule 407, frequently in regard to products liability actions. 57 counsel is advised to consult the language of the applicable rule or statute.

Measures taken prior to an occurrence are not covered by Federal Rules of Evidence 407, since it applies solely to measures taken after an event. 58 Nor would Rule 407 seem to apply to actions taken after an event but initiated prior to it, 59 although there is authority to the contrary. 60

◆ Caution: It is clear from the wording in the history of Rule 407 that the term "event" refers to the time of the accident or injury to plaintiff, not to the time of manufacture of the product, the creation of the hazard, 61 or the sale of the accident-causing item by the manufacturer. 62

◆ Practice guide: If evidence of subsequent remedial measures is erroneously admitted at trial, the District Court has the discretion to determine whether or not a mistrial should be granted or whether to instruct the jury to disregard any reference to such evidence. 63 But it has been held that the erroneous admission of evidence of subsequent remedial measures cannot be cured by the court's instruction to the jury that such evidence may not be regarded as the defendant's admission of liability, particularly when the probative value of the evidence is outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice and confusion. 64

Prosthetic manufacturer's letters to customers after plaintiff's fall when his prosthetic leg broke were properly excluded on ground that they furnished precise torque measurements to be observed in screwing pylon to clamp in prosthetic limbs and were thus post-accident safety measure, despite plaintiffs' arguments that letters were admissible to prove feasibility of providing torque measurements earlier and to show control manufacturer exerted over its prosthetist customers since feasibility was not controverted and control was not issue. Cameron v Otto Bock Orthopedic Indus. (1994, CA1 Mass) 43 F3d 14.

Motion in limine is granted, where worker brought strict products liability claim against manufacturer of machine which injured him, and manufacturer sought to exclude evidence of remedial design changes in machine between time worker's employer purchased machine and time of worker's injury, 23 years later, because FRE 407 bars admission of subsequent remedial measures to show negligence in connection with injury, and rule applies to postmanufacture, pre-injury changes. Wusinich v Aeroquip Corp. (1994, ED Pa) 843 F Supp 959.

In suit alleging, inter alia, negligent misrepresentation by defendant regarding expiration dates of stock options, notices sent by defendant to remind stock option holders of impending deadlines was admissible to impeach defense witness's testimony that language of post-retirement deadlines for exercise of stock options was simple and straightforward, regardless of whether it was admissible as evidence of subsequent remedial measure. Trytko v Hubbell, Inc. (1994, CA7 Ind) 28 F3d 715, reh den (1994, CA7) 1994 US App LEXIS 28060.

In an appeal of a take-nothing judgment in a slip and fall case, the trial court properly excluded evidence: (1) where the victim attempted to use a statement made to her by a store employee to impeach another store employee by showing bias, because bias of a witness can be shown only by introducing evidence of prior statements made by that witness; (2) where the victim attempted to introduce the store's safety manual, because the victim did not lay a proper predicate for the admission of the manual by asking the witness if she had ever seen or read the manual; and (3) where the victim attempted to introduce the store's post-accident instruction for the employees to be more careful, because it was not a subsequent remedial measure that could be used as evidence of the feasibility of a precautionary measure since the store did not alter the manner in which the plants were sprayed. Keetch v Kroger Co. (1992, Tex) 845 SW2d 262.

§ 464 Purpose of rule

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Rule 407 is based on the policy of encouraging potential defendants to remedy hazardous conditions without fear that their actions will be used as evidence against them. 65 The extrinsic policy basis for Rule 407 is that allowing evidence of subsequent remedial measures would discourage owners from improving the condition causing the injury because of their fear of the evidential use of such improvement to their disadvantage. 66

Evidence of subsequent remedial measures is incompetent or inadmissible because the taking of such precautions against the future is not to be construed as an admission of responsibility for the past, has no legitimate tendency to prove that the defendant had been negligent before the accident happened, and is calculated to distract the minds of the jury from the real issue and to create a prejudice against the defendant. 67 Some decisions also emphasize, in excluding evidence of subsequent repairs made or precautions taken after an accident, that if the rule was otherwise and such evidence was to be admitted, it would amount to an admission or confession of negligence on the part of the defendant 68 and would bring collateral issues into the case. 69

◆ Observation: It has been noted that perhaps the more important reason why Rule 407 was codified was that prominent exceptions and uneven application of the common law doctrine by the courts had caused the rule to lose its vitality by making the Rule a positive rule of admissibility rather than one of exclusion. Yet despite codification, it appears that the Rule against admitting evidence of subsequent repairs has not regained its vitality and many still view it as a rule of inclusion rather than one of exclusion. 70 Moreover, the fact that the proof can be introduced for impeachment purposes invites courtroom "games": Ostensibly seeking an admission from an adverse witness that greater care could have been taken, trial counsel will actually be happier (when subsequent precautions have in fact been taken) if he can goad the witness to say just the opposite—that "we did all we reasonably could"—so that the counterproof of subsequent precautions may come in, theoretically for impeachment purposes and to show feasibility. 71 Furthermore, despite the avowed policy of the courts to read the exceptions narrowly, 72 it has been pointed out that in view of the fact that the exceptions listed in the rule are nonexclusive (being preceded by the term "such as"), that the purposes beyond the reach of the exclusionary principle are so numerous, and that so often is evidence of subsequent measures admitted, that Rule 407 seldom requires actual exclusion of evidence. 73

§ 464 ----Purpose of rule [SUPPLEMENT]Case authorities:

Evidence of modification of lumber- mill saw to include physical guard over opening was not subject to exclusion under Rule 407 since third party, not defendant- manufacturer, modified it, and district court's exclusion of evidence as unfairly prejudicial was improper since fact that proffered modification tended to show negligence or product liability rather than just feasibility did not constitute improper use of evidence, and it was not unfairly prejudicial on issue of whether saw was unreasonably dangerous at time of manufacture since modification was not subsequent design developed well after saw was manufactured. Espeignnette v Gene Tierney Co. (1994, CA1 Me) 43 F3d 1, CCH Prod Liab Rep ¶ 14121, 41 Fed Rules Evid Serv 94.

§ 465 Inadmissibility to prove negligent or culpable conduct

View Entire Section

Go to Supplement

Rule 407 provides that evidence of measures taken after an event which, if taken previously, would have made the event less likely to occur, is not admissible to prove negligence or culpable conduct ⁷⁴ in connection with the event. Rule 407 is broad enough to make inadmissible the question of negligence or culpable conduct, evidence of—

—post-accident repairs. ⁷⁵

—installation of safety devices. ⁷⁶ such as the addition of handrails. ⁷⁷

—changes in design. ⁷⁸

—the removal of dangerous conditions. ⁷⁹

- changes in the scene of an accident. 80
- changes in safety procedures. 81
- changes in other procedures. 82 such as the introduction of a revised consent form. 83
- changes in regulations. 84
- changes in labels or instructions, including warnings regarding the product. 85
- installation of warning signs. 86
- voluntary withdrawal of the product from the market. 87
- change in language in contested passage in a book in its subsequent paperback edition. 88
- the dismissal of an employee charged with causing an accident. 89
- changes in prison regulations restricting the possession and transfer of personal property. 90
- changes in police department policies after the incident. 91
- police department disciplinary proceedings and evidence about the investigation of actions taken by a police officer. 92

Case authorities:

In action against nature park for negligence when musky bit patron, trial court reasonably exercised its discretion by excluding evidence of subsequent remedial measure of placing warning signs by musky pond day after incident where trial court's explanation, that it could have allowed information into evidence in safe-place case as exception to prohibition against subsequent remedial measures but chose not to since fact that signs were there was not probative enough and therefore prejudicial effect would outweigh any probative value, showed trial court examined relevant facts, applied proper standards and, using demonstrative rational process, reached conclusion reasonable judge could reach (Stats §§ 904.03, 904.07). Ollhoff v Peck (1993, App) 177 Wis 2d 719, 503 NW2d 323, review den (Wis) 508 NW2d 423.

§ 466 Strict liability cases: exclusionary rule held inapplicable

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Opinion is divided on the question of whether the exclusionary doctrine barring admission of evidence of subsequent remedial measures applies in product liability litigation. 93 In the landmark Ault case—which was handed down while Congress was enacting the Federal Rules of Evidence—the California Supreme Court held that the doctrine excluding proof of subsequent remedial measures does not apply to strict liability claims against manufacturers. 94

In Ault, the question was whether plaintiff could support his personal injury claim against an automaker by evidence of a post-accident change in the design of a gearbox. The vehicle in which he had been riding plunged over a cliff, and plaintiff's theory was that the accident had been caused when the gearbox failed from metal fatigue. In the action, which was tried on a theory of strict liability in tort, the trial court admitted evidence that, after the accident, the defendant manufacturer of the vehicle had ceased to use aluminum in manufacturing its gear boxes and had changed to iron, which plaintiff's experts testified was less likely to fail. The California Supreme Court held that the underlying purpose of the law would not be served by applying the exclusionary doctrine in this context since, while the exclusionary rule is applied in negligence cases as a matter of "public policy"—on the ground that the exclusion of such evidence may be necessary to avoid deterring individuals from making improvements or repairs after an accident has occurred—the exclusionary rule plays no comparable role in the products liability field. The court noted that the normal products liability defendant is a corporate mass producer of goods who manufactures tens of thousands of units of goods and that it would be manifestly unrealistic to suggest that such a producer will forego making improvements in its product, and risk innumerable additional lawsuits and the attendant adverse effect upon its public image, simply because evidence of adoption of such improvement may be admitted in an action founded on strict liability for recovery on an injury that preceded the improvement. 95

◆ Observation: The court in Ault rejected the claim that the term "culpable conduct" 96 encompasses the "blameworthy" conduct of a manufacturer in placing on the market a defective product, suggesting that its construction would not empty the term of all meaning, since it would still embrace such "faulty conduct" as "wanton and reckless" behavior, which are not comfortably included in "negligence." 97

A number of states have followed the reasoning in Ault, holding that evidence of subsequent measures is admissible in strict liability cases. 98 Thus, a state court has cited the "dramatic" difference between negligence cases, where due care will exonerate defendant, and strict liability cases, where it is no longer any answer that the defendant injured the plaintiff carefully; development of strict liability cannot have been intended to countenance an evidentiary rule which would so sweepingly exclude postaccident design evidence of a defect simply because it touches on prior conduct under which present law is irrelevant to liability. 99

The legislative history of Federal Rule 407 is silent on the question raised and resolved in California by Ault. A few circuits have embraced Ault, taking the view that evidence of such subsequent remedial measures is admissible as substantive evidence in a strict liability action, 1 although most of the federal circuit courts do apply the exclusionary rule. 2

◆ Caution: Although the Eighth Circuit generally holds that the exclusionary rule does not apply in strict liability cases, it has applied Federal Rules of Evidence 407 in strict liability actions alleging a failure to warn about the dangers of an unavoidably unsafe product where issues of reasonableness and foreseeability closely akin to those raised in negligence cases are present. 3

◆ Practice guide: In jurisdictions where evidence of subsequent remedial measures is admissible with regard to strict liability claims, but not with regard to negligence claims, counsel for the defense should be careful to request a limiting instruction under Federal Rules of Evidence 105. 4

Some state enactments based on the Uniform Rules of Evidence include the defective condition of a product in a products liability action in the list of purposes for which evidence of a remedial measure need not be excluded. 5

§ 466 ----Strict liability cases: exclusionary rule held inapplicable [SUPPLEMENT]

Practice Aids: Federal Rule of Evidence 407: Should it apply to products liability? 11
Touro LR 1:253 (1994).

Case authorities:

The proscriptions of Evid R 407 do not apply to a products liability action premised upon strict liability in tort, where, by its own terms, the rule excludes evidence of subsequent remedial measures only when negligence or culpable conduct is alleged; in a products liability case based on strict liability, the focus is solely on the defective condition of the product and not on what the defendant knew or should have known of the defect which caused the injury. *McFarland v Bruno Mach. ◆ Comment: The opinion of the California Supreme Court in Ault has a major bearing on Rule 407 interpretation because it (1) construed language in a state statute which is substantially identical to Rule 407, (2) proved to be a highly influential opinion, among both state and federal courts, (3) introduced variation in what before had been a broad and uniform exclusionary doctrine, and (4) influenced a number of states that adopted the Uniform Act to change the provisions of Rule 407 to accord with the holding of the Ault case.

In contrast to the view allowing the admission of evidence of subsequent remedial measures in a strict liability case, 6 a majority of federal circuits which have considered the issue reject Ault 7 and hold that Rule 407 does apply in strict liability cases, so that evidence of subsequent measures is excludable. 8 The same result has also been reached in some states (both with and without similar rules). 9

Traditionally it has been noted that the introduction of evidence about subsequent changes in product or its design threatens to confuse the jury 10 by diverting its attention from whether the product was defective at the relevant time, 11 and is properly excludable for its lack of probative value. 12 In rejecting the Ault doctrine, the courts have advanced a number of arguments:

(1) The argument that culpable conduct is not at issue in a strict liability case is purely semantic; although a manufacturer may be held strictly liable even if the accident was unavoidable, in other cases liability will be imposed where the accident might have been avoided, and in such a case the failure to apply Federal Rules of Evidence 407 might deter subsequent remedial measures to the same degree as in a negligence case. 13 Arguing that the terms should be given a greater-includes-the-lesser construction so as to embrace the "conduct" which produces defective products, the court in the leading case of Werner v Upjohn Co., 14 stated that strict liability involves conduct which is technically less blameworthy than simple negligence, since the plaintiff need not prove a breach of duty by the defendant other than placing the product on the market. From a policy standpoint it follows that if the rule expressly excludes evidence of subsequent repairs to prove culpable conduct that the same should be true for strict liability. Stated another way, if the common law and Congress were willing to exclude the evidence on the issue of culpable conduct, the result should be no different on policy grounds as long as strict liability is not distinguishable on some other ground. 15

(2) Whatever may be the difference between a focus on the product in strict liability cases and a focus on defendant's conduct in negligence cases, it produces but an empty distinction when it comes to the underlying purposes of the Rule. 16

(3) At least some kinds of "strict liability" claims in fact raise negligence issues, or issues which cannot be distinguished from negligence. 17

Despite the fact that the Eighth Circuit has held that the exclusionary rule does not apply in strict liability cases, 18 it has applied Federal Rules of Evidence 407 in strict liability actions alleging a failure to warn about the dangers of an unavoidably unsafe product where issues of reasonableness and foreseeability closely akin to those raised in negligence cases are present. 19 It has been pointed out that the issue of due care is essential to the determination of liability in a case involving prescription drugs and the standard for liability under strict liability and negligence is essentially the same in a case involving the adequacy of a warning, particularly when a failure-to-warn case involves an unavoidably dangerous drug. 20

Variations of the Uniform Rules of Evidence enacted by some states provide that negligence or culpable conduct also include the manufacture or sale of a defective product, or include strict liability along with negligence and culpable conduct. 21

§ 468 --Law governing

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

There is a conflict of authority as to whether Federal Rules of Evidence 407 or a state rule governing the admissibility of subsequent remedial measures applies in a strict liability action brought in federal court on the basis of diversity. One view holds that

Federal Rules of Evidence 407 governs, because federal law governs the admissibility of evidence in diversity cases. 22 Under this view, it is recognized that Federal Rules of Evidence 407 has both substantive and procedural aspects; although its primary purpose is to promote safety, a purely substantive goal, an important procedural reason for the rule is to enhance accuracy and reduce expense in the adjudicative process by keeping from the jury evidence that Congress does not believe a jury has the ability from which to draw the correct inferences. 23

In the federal circuits that follow the reasoning of the Ault case, 24 the opposite view has been expressed in products liability cases, holding that the admissibility of evidence in diversity actions is not governed exclusively by federal law, that is, the Federal Rules of Evidence, and that the question of whether subsequent remedial measures are admissible is a matter of state law. 25 Since the purpose of the exclusionary rule is not to expedite trial proceedings, but rather to promote public policy in a substantive law area, when conflicts arise between Federal Rules of Evidence 407 and state law regarding admissibility of evidence of subsequent remedial measures the state rule controls because: (1) there is no federal products liability law; (2) the elements and proof of a products liability case are governed by the law of the state where the injury occurred; and (3) an announced state law which conflicts with Federal Rules of Evidence 407 is so closely tied to the substantive law to which it relates that it must be applied in a diversity action in order to promote uniformity, and to prevent forum shopping. 26 To similar effect, it has been held that because the question of whether to permit evidence of subsequent remedial measures in strict products liability actions depends upon policy considerations rather than relevancy, it is governed by state law in diversity actions. 27

◆ Caution: In a few instances it has been said that it is not clear whether federal or state law applies to evidence of subsequent remedial measures in strict liability cases. 28

§ 469 Evidence of product recall

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

When voluntarily undertaken by the manufacturer of a product, product recall campaigns appear to come under the "subsequent measures" category of Rule 407, and would be within the exclusionary doctrine if it applies. But often recall campaigns are launched under regulatory pressure, which suggests on the one hand that the main underlying policy of Rule 407 (to encourage responsible behavior) is not implicated (the government having taken control),²⁹ but which injects on the other hand the complicating factor that the recall reflects not so much the manufacturer's conclusion that the product is defective or dangerous as the government's conclusion.³⁰

Courts following *Ault*³¹ often admit evidence of product recall,³² while courts rejecting Ault are more likely reach the opposite result.³³ Some opinions point to government involvement in the recall as a reason to find Rule 407 inapplicable and conclude that the proof should be admitted. 34

◆ Observation: In such cases the hearsay doctrine is implicated, the question being whether governmental findings satisfy the criteria set up by Rule 803(8)—the exception for official records and findings. 35

Other opinions have concluded that the very fact of official involvement makes it unfair to admit the evidence and produces a counterincentive against cooperating with regulatory agencies. 36

◆ Reminder: Evidence of product recall is subject to the relevancy requirement, and may reasonably be excluded if the recall addressed a condition not present in the product in suit or unrelated to the accident. 37

§ 470 Measures required by government agency

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Where a measure is taken, not out of a sense of social responsibility, but, rather, because the measure is required by a superior authority—as in the case of reports required by a government agency—the reasons for the measure are outside the rationale behind the Rule, and Federal Rules of Evidence 407 may not be invoked to render such evidence inadmissible. 38 Thus, evidence of an amendment to a manufacturer's warning accompanying the Cu-7 intrauterine device (IUD), which amendment was made after the plaintiff sustained injuries from her use of the IUD, was admissible under Federal Rules of Evidence 407 where the manufacturer's remedial measure of amending the warning was taken in compliance with a regulation of the federal Food and Drug Administration that had been issued prior to plaintiff's receiving the IUD, because the manufacturer's post-injury measure was mandatory rather than voluntary, and because the FDA regulation and the manufacturer's post-injury warning were probative of the state of medical knowledge at the time the plaintiff received her IUD, and of the manufacturer's having notice, prior to the plaintiff's sustaining injury, of a feasible alternative warning.

◆ Observation: In upholding the admissibility of a product recall letter, it was noted that the policy underlying the exclusionary rule does not apply, since the recall of defective vehicles is not voluntary but mandated by federal statute. 40

However, if the measure is not mandatory, it would fall under Rule 407 and not be admissible. 41

§ 471 Measures taken by third parties

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

The policy of Rule 407 is not to be served by excluding evidence of subsequent measures undertaken by third parties not involved in the litigation. While Rule 407 makes no express provision for this situation, substantial modern authority is to the effect that Rule 407 does not apply where third persons carry out remedial measures. 42 Nor is it error to receive, as against one defendant, evidence of post-accident changes effected by another defendant. 43 Evidence of third-party action may also be admissible to show that it would have been feasible 44 to improve the safety of the product. 45

The post-accident erection of a sign on a road in a national park stating that bicyclists on rental bicycles were not permitted on the steep hill ahead was not excludable as a subsequent remedial measure since it was not a measure taken by the defendant concessionaire which rented the bicycle but by the United States Park Service which controlled the road. 46 Similarly, in a suit against a railroad, it was not error to admit evidence of post-accident repairs or improvements at a grade crossing where such changes were made by the State Highway Department which was not a party to the suit. 47

But a state rule akin to Rule 407 was held to preclude an elevator manufacturer sued for injuries sustained by a hospital employee on strict liability grounds from introducing evidence of postaccident safety measures taken by the hospital. Although the rule had no application to a theory of strict liability, 48 it was nevertheless applicable where the jury was asked to determine, for purposes of apportionment, whether the nonparty hospital was negligent, where there was no strict liability theory asserted against the hospital, and where the jury's determination would have a direct effect on the amount of damages the manufacturer would be required to pay. 49

◆ Observation: While neither the text of Rule 407 nor the policy underlying it excludes evidence of subsequent repairs made by someone other than the defendant, exclusion would nevertheless be proper where the evidence lacked sufficient probative value and injected the dangers of confusion and misleading the jury. 50 In one instance, the court said it could not see how an alternative design, developed by another person years after the product in question was manufactured, is relevant to whether the product was reasonably safe at the time it was made. 51

§ 472 Evidence of non-remedial actions

View Entire Section

Not all action taken after an injury-causing event is necessarily a "subsequent remedial measure." For example, evidence of post-event tests or reports conducted for the purpose of investigating the occurrence to discover what might have gone wrong is not excludible under Federal Rules of Evidence 407, because in this instance no remedial measure is being taken to remedy any flaws or failures. 52 In other words, "subsequent remedial measures" include only the actual remedial measures themselves and not the initial steps taken toward ascertaining whether any remedial measures are called for. 53 A fortiori, a report on the safety of an appliance, which defendants had commissioned prior to plaintiff's accident, and which had eventually been used to help plan a voluntary recall of the appliance, was not a "remedial measure." 54

◆ Caution: A party's efforts to exclude evidence as a subsequent remedial measure will not be sanctioned by the court where such measure is seen as a deliberate destruction of highly relevant evidence. 55

b. Admissibility for Particular Purposes [473-479]

§ 473 Generally; non-exhaustive nature of provision

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Rule 407 does not require the exclusion of evidence of subsequent measures when offered for particular purposes, such as proving ownership, control, or feasibility of precautionary measures, if controverted, or impeachment. 56 Although the exceptions listed in Federal Rules of Evidence 407 are illustrative, 57 and not exhaustive, 58 the exceptions to the rule are to be narrowly read in order to preserve the important policy of encouraging subsequent remedial measures. 59 Furthermore, in order to be admissible the evidence must be both relevant and probative. 60

◆ Practice guide: The admissibility of evidence of subsequent remedial measures when offered for particular purposes cannot be determined in advance of trial, because the relevance of such evidence can only be determined in the context of the state of the evidence at the time that proof of subsequent remedial measures is offered in evidence. 61 Therefore, the trial judge has broad power to ensure that evidence of remedial measures is not improperly admitted under the guise of the "other purpose" exception. 62

Under Federal Rules of Evidence 407, before evidence of subsequent measures may be introduced for other purposes, such purposes must be "controverted." 63 Therefore, evidence of subsequent measures will be automatically excluded unless a genuine issue is present. Otherwise the factors of undue prejudice, confusion of issues, misleading the jury, and waste of time remain for consideration under Rule 403. 64 Because the exceptions listed in Federal Rules of Evidence 407 deal with situations where the defendant attempts to make offensive use of the exclusion, such as contending that no remedial measure was possible or making statements conflicting with the fact of the subsequent remedial measure, any new exceptions should follow this rationale. 65

◆ Practice guide: Once a trial court has determined that evidence of subsequent remedial measures is admissible for a purpose other than showing negligence, the court must make it plain to the jury that the evidence may only be considered with respect to issues other than the possible negligence of the defendant. 66 Furthermore, in order to preserve the point for appeal, counsel should request such a limiting instruction, and should object to a failure of the trial court to so instruct the jury. 67

A party can lay the groundwork for the exclusion of evidence of subsequent measures to prove ownership, control, or feasibility of precautionary measures by making an admission. 68

§ 474 Ownership or control

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Rule 407 specifically provides that it does not require exclusion of evidence of subsequent measures when offered to prove ownership or control of the premises or instrumentality involved in an event. 69 This is in accord with the widely-recognized exception to the rule of inadmissibility where it is necessary to show that the defendant had control of the premises or device, where the matter of control is in dispute. 70 For example, evidence that a defendant, subsequent to an accident, had shortened the boom of a crane which had come into contact with high-tension wires that had electrocuted the deceased has been held admissible to prove control of the crane by the defendant, in a wrongful death action. 71 Evidence that a defendant subsequently put out signs to show that the portion of the road in question was under defendant's control has been ruled admissible in an action against a road contractor for negligent failure to put out warning signs. 72

In actions arising out of an accident in which a passing train struck the scaffold of a sign painter who had been hired by railroad advertising company to paint a viaduct owned by railroad, evidence of the advertising company's post-accident adoption of a procedure notifying railroads of the presence of their painters was admissible to show whether notification to the railroads was in the advertising company's control, where such fact was disputed. 73

On the other hand, where control is not in dispute, as where defendant admits control of the premises, evidence of subsequent repairs is not admissible. 74

§ 475 Feasibility of precautionary measures

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Evidence of subsequent measures may be offered for the purpose of showing the feasibility of precautionary measures, if controverted. 75 In other words, evidence of subsequent remedial measures is admissible to show the feasibility of cautionary measures where feasibility is contested by the party against whom such evidence is offered. 76 Moreover, feasibility should be actually, and not merely formally, in dispute before evidence of subsequent remedial measures is admitted. 77

◆ Caution: Federal Rules of Evidence 407 and similar state principles require that the feasibility of precautionary measures be controverted, and evidence of subsequent corrective measures is not admissible where the feasibility of alternative designs is conceded. 78 And where such evidence is offered after previous testimony that such repairs could be made simply, easily, and inexpensively, additional evidence regarding subsequent repairs is cumulative and possibly prejudicial under Federal Rules of Evidence 403, justifying its exclusion. 79

Feasibility denotes whether it would have been practicable to have employed the remedial measures earlier. 80 It does not involve the question of whether the defendant knew or should have known but nonetheless did not employ remedial measures earlier, such being a question of culpability or negligence. 81 Whether something is feasible relates not only to actual possibility of operation, and its cost and convenience, but also to its ultimate utility and success in its intended performance; that is to say, "feasible" means not only possible, but also capable of being utilized, or dealt with successfully. 82

◆ Observation: The feasibility exception raises difficult issues if the change in design, procedure, or warning made by defendant is arguably the product of a technological breakthrough which had not been made at the time of the accident. The fact of change does not always mean improvement. When such difficulties appear, the exception cannot assure admissibility, 83 and concerns of relevancy and confusion of issues provide ample basis for exclusion of the evidence. 84

§ 476 --Controverting issue of feasibility

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

There are two lines of authority on the issue of how the feasibility of taking precautionary measures may be controverted. Under one view, a controversy as to the feasibility of precautionary measures may only be raised by the defendant; 85 only if the defendant contends that no such repair or improvement was possible, will the plaintiff be allowed to introduce evidence of subsequent remedial measures. 86 Furthermore, a plaintiff will not be allowed to controvert the feasibility of change in a design defect case by merely asserting that the manufacturer did not make a change in the product. 87

Under the alternative line of authority, the court will hold that a defendant has controverted feasibility unless it expressly concedes by stipulation or admission that at the time of the accident in question precautionary measures were feasible, and the court will allow a plaintiff to present evidence of later remedial measures to show their feasibility prior to the accident. 88 Under this view, even if the feasibility of remedial measures is apparent, so that it would be pointless for a defendant to deny the feasibility of modification, manufacturer defendants are deemed to controvert feasibility unless they unequivocally admit it. 89 The court will find a controversy because the plaintiff is obligated to prove this element of her case. 90 Moreover, the defendant will not be permitted to subsequently assert that because it did not attempt to rebut the plaintiff's proof, the issue was not controverted at trial. 91

§ 477 --Specific measures demonstrating feasibility

View Entire Section

Evidence of subsequent measures admitted for the purpose of proving the feasibility of taking precautionary measures includes evidence of——a change of design of a product subsequent to an event, for the purpose of underscoring the feasibility of such precautionary measures. 92 but not to show that if such measures had been taken previously, the event would have been less likely to occur. 93

—a postoccurrence change which tends to satisfy the plaintiff's burden, in a defective design case, that the product as designed was incapable of preventing the injury complained of, that there existed an alternative design which would have prevented the injury, and that in terms of cost, practicality, and technological possibility, the alternative design was feasible. 94

—a remedial instruction, for the purpose of proving that with a different instruction, the harm would not have resulted and that failure to give such instruction created an unreasonably dangerous product. 95

—warning labels for the purpose of showing the feasibility and the cost of giving a warning. 96

—changes in the standard equipment provided for a product, to show that such additional measures were feasible. 97

—the addition of further safety devices to give the operator of a product additional protection. 98

—a change in policy requiring police officers riding in squad cars to have attended state police academy, in an action arising out of the shooting of plaintiff by a police officer. 99

§ 478 Impeachment and rebuttal

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Rule 407 does not preclude the admission of evidence of subsequent measures for purposes of impeachment. 1 Evidence of subsequent repairs, alterations, or precautions may be admissible in impeachment of a witness, 2 or rebuttal of testimony that a product could not be improved. 3 When the defendant opens the issue by claiming that all reasonable care was being exercised at the time of an occurrence, the plaintiff may attack that contention by showing later repairs or changes in design which are inconsistent with that claim. 4 Plaintiffs may also rebut the contention that they were properly warned of possible dangers in using the manufacturer's product. 5

It has been suggested that evidence of subsequent remedial measures itself contradicts and in a sense impeaches a defendant's contention that he was exercising due care or that materials used in the manufacture of a product were appropriate for their intended application; but to allow such an argument to satisfy the impeachment exception would make the rule of inadmissibility meaningless. 6 Therefore, a court will be reluctant to admit for impeachment purposes evidence of subsequent remedial measures which simply contradict a defendant's testimony that it used due care with respect to a product. 7 Thus, it has been held that where defendant offers evidence that the device, process or design in question is reasonably safe, such proof does not amount to a contention that all precautions have been taken or that nothing better was possible, and in this situation, proof of a subsequent remedial measure designed to improve the device, process, or design should not be admissible under the impeachment clause of Rule 407. 8

In a number of cases, the courts have allowed evidence of subsequent measures for impeachment purposes under the exception to Rule 407. 9 Thus, in a wrongful death action, where a witness testified that a particular product was safe to operate, his letter, after decedent's death, to dealers of the product warning them about the death-dealing propensities of the product when used in the fashion employed by the deceased, was admissible for impeachment purposes. 10 In an action for damages against a carrier by a woman who was raped in a dark area of a station, where a witness testified that lighting at the station was checked on a daily basis, evidence that a new fluorescent fixture was installed four days after the attack was admissible for impeachment purposes. 11 Testimony that plaintiffs found it advisable to include more detailed instructions for the use of a product which failed in service, in an action for damages against a manufacturer, could properly be used to impeach plaintiffs' witnesses who stated that the fabrication plans were adequate and that more precise grinding instructions were unnecessary. 12

In a negligence action brought by motel guests against a motel, in which it was alleged that plaintiff was attacked and raped by an unknown assailant who forcibly entered her

5. Payment of Medical and Similar Expenses (Rule 409) [480-482]

§ 480 Inadmissibility to establish negligence

View Entire Section

Evidence showing payment, or an offer or promise of payment, of the medical, hospital, and similar expenses of an injured party is not admissible to establish negligence on the part of the party making the payment, offer, or promise, in the absence of other circumstances indicating that such conduct amounted to an admission of liability. 26 The reason for this rule is that such payment or offer is usually made from humane impulses and not from an admission of liability, and that to hold otherwise would tend to discourage assistance to the injured person. 27

◆ Observation: It has been noted that the exclusionary principle is significant in the context of "advance payments" by insurance carriers to persons injured in accidents, that is, payments made prior to settlement or trial of underlying issues respecting negligence or damages; the importance of encouraging such advance payments is obvious. 28

The generally accepted view has been codified in a Rule which provides that evidence of furnishing or offering or promising to pay medical, hospital, or similar expenses occasioned by an injury is not admissible to prove liability for the injury. 29

◆ Caution: There is one jurisdiction, however, where it has been held that evidence of payment, or an offer or promise of payment, of the medical, hospital, and similar expenses of an injured party, is admissible for the purpose of establishing negligence on the part of the party making the payment or offer. 30 There is also some authority supporting such a result where the payment or offer is accompanied by an admission of liability, or the surrounding circumstances indicate such an admission. 31 And even where such evidence is not admissible, the improper admission of such evidence does not necessarily constitute reversible error. 32

Case authorities:

In personal injury action against county based on county's negligence in supervising plaintiff's foster care, trial court properly excluded from evidence payments by AFDC and Medi-Cal, and medical services provided by Shriner's Hospital. However, after return of verdict that included damages for which such payments were made or were obligated to be made, county could bring noticed motion to have judgment reduced by amounts paid before trial, whereupon trial court would have to order reimbursement from judgment to provider of any payments made by Medi-Cal, AFDC, and other nonfederal publicly funded sources of benefits with statutory lien rights. Further, court could (but was not required to) order reimbursement of private medical programs or similar sources. Scott v County of Los Angeles (1994, 2nd Dist) 27 Cal App 4th 125, 32 Cal Rptr 2d 643, 94 CDOS 5923, 94 Daily Journal DAR 10695, review den (Cal) 1994 Cal LEXIS 5603 and (criticized by California Fed. § 481 Admissibility for other purposes

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Evidence of the furnishing of medical benefits is not excludible under FRE Rule 409 if it is offered not to prove liability or the extent of injury, but for some other purpose, such as to show that the alleged tortfeasor is an employer or the tort victim is an employee under a statutory compensation system. 33 Some common-law decisions applying state rules indicate that evidence of assistance, or offers to assist, may be shown in proof of other specific narrow elements essential to a finding of liability, such as ownership or control of a vehicle or instrumentality, or agency. 34

◆ Observation: It has been pointed out however, that when offered for any such purposes, proof of payment of medical, hospital, or similar expenses, or of offers or promises to pay such expenses, should be excluded under Rule 409, since, had the intent of the Rule been to exclude evidence only when offered upon the foundational question of "negligence or culpable conduct," and to allow receipt of such evidence on narrow factual components which comprise liability, the Rule could have been drafted in the same manner as Rule 407, which does allow proof of subsequent remedial measures upon such points. 35

Contrary to Rule 408, dealing with offers of compromise, 36 Rule 409 does not extend to conduct or statements not a part of the act of furnishing or offering or promising to pay. This difference in treatment arises from fundamental differences in nature. Communication is essential if compromises are to be effected, and consequently broad protection of statements is needed. This is not so in cases of payments or offers or promises to pay medical expenses, where factual statements may be expected to be incidental in nature. 37

Nothing in Rule 409 38 indicates an intent to require exclusion of any kind of evidence to the effect that one party has rendered assistance to another, when offered in proof by the very party rendering such assistance to mitigate a damage claim brought by the party assisted. In this circumstance, the proof is not offered to show "liability" within the meaning of the Rule, but to demonstrate nonliability, or at least to reduce the amount of liability. 39

6. Liability Insurance (Rule 411) [483-495]

a. In General; In Negligence Cases [483-492]

(1). Overview [483-487]

§ 483 General rule of inadmissibility

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

As a broad general rule, evidence directly or indirectly showing or tending to show that the defendant in a personal injury or death action carries liability insurance, protecting himself against liability to third persons on account of his own negligence, is not admissible. 40 Conversely, if the plaintiff in a personal injury action makes no attempt to show that the defendant is indemnified from loss by an insurance company, it is not proper for the defendant to offer testimony showing that he is not indemnified by insurance. 41 Under this rule, any evidence offered by the plaintiff, through the direct examination of his own witnesses or the introduction of documents, that the defendant carries liability insurance should be excluded. 42

The general rule of inadmissibility has been codified in the Rules of Evidence which provide that evidence that a person was or was not insured against liability is not admissible upon the issue whether the person acted negligently or otherwise wrongfully. 43 Accordingly, under FRE Rule 411 both disclosure of evidence of insurance, 44 or lack of insurance, 45 is inadmissible. However, the Rule does not require the exclusion of evidence of insurance against liability when offered for another purpose, 46 such as proof of agency, ownership, or control, 47 or bias or prejudice of a witness. 48

The Federal Rules of Evidence, rather than state rules, govern the admissibility of evidence of insurance in diversity cases. 49

- ◆ Practice guide: Testimony regarding insurance, excluded under FRE Rule 411, should be given outside the presence of the jury, to produce an accurate record for review rather than mere speculation. 50

- ◆ Observation: The courts generally deny the right of the plaintiff's attorney to cross-examine the defendant, or a witness for the defendant, with the purpose of eliciting a statement of the fact that he carries liability insurance or of eliciting such fact upon redirect examination of the plaintiff. 51

- ◆ Comment: A provision of the discovery rules expressly permits discovery of "the existence and contents" of any insurance agreements which might provide funds to satisfy a judgment, even while recognizing that evidence of insurance is not "by reason of disclosure admissible" at trial. 52 There is no indication that the framers of Rule 411 intended in any way to affect discovery rights respecting insurance under the Civil Rules, and Rule 411 should not be so read. Indeed, the discovery of insurance was made possible mainly in the interests of encouraging pretrial settlement, 53 and the discovery rule thus serves the basic policy underlying Rule 408, which deals with compromises and offers to compromise. 54

§ 484 Purpose of rule

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

The principle of exclusion expressed in Rule 411⁵⁵ is a specific application of the concept of relevancy defined in Rule 401. But it has been said to be more than that; there is a widespread belief that the mention of insurance will induce juries in close cases to opt for a finding of liability, where otherwise they might find nonliability out of sympathy for a defendant thought personally responsible for paying any judgment; it is widely feared as well that the mention of insurance invites higher awards.⁵⁶ In other words, there is a feeling that knowledge of the presence or absence of liability insurance would induce juries to decide cases on improper grounds,⁵⁷ and result in extravagant jury verdicts.⁵⁸ The chief reason for denying its admissibility has been said to lie in the fact that it tends to influence and prejudice jurors by imparting to them the information that whatever verdict they may render will be immaterial to the defendant, since he will not have to pay it.⁵⁹

Technically, such evidence is inadmissible because it is irrelevant; the fact that the defendant carries liability insurance is not relevant to the fact of his liability,⁶⁰ though the situation may be different if punitive damages are sought.⁶¹ Clearly, the mere fact that insurance to protect against the consequences of negligence is carried by one charged with such consequences is no evidence of negligent propensities,⁶² and it cannot be introduced as an admission of negligence.⁶³ However, where the defendant concedes that he is less likely to use care if insured, than if uninsured, the fact that he does carry insurance becomes competent evidence upon the question of his negligence.⁶⁴

♦ Observation: It has been suggested that the theory that insurance will incline a party toward carelessness is tenuous at best, and—at least in the common context of automobile accidents, where the exercise of care is directly related to the instinct for self-preservation—probably wholly fallacious, and that the theory that the absence of coverage will incline a person toward the exercise of care, or on the contrary that it indicates general carelessness, hence negligence on a particular occasion, seems likewise improbable.⁶⁵

§ 485 Unresponsive or inadvertent reference to insurance

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

If counsel propounds a question which calls for proper testimony in response, the fact that an unresponsive or inadvertent answer includes a reference to insurance will not generally be a ground for declaring a mistrial. 66 In some cases a distinction has been made between the proper rule to be applied where counsel examines his own witness and where he examines a witness of the adverse party, it being said that it cannot be presumed that the plaintiff's counsel in cross-examining the defendant's witness will know what the answer will be, as might be the case if the plaintiff or one of his witnesses were testifying. 67

§ 486 Reference to insurance as part of an admission by defendant

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Where the defendant makes a statement amounting to an admission of liability, it will not be rendered inadmissible by the fact that the jury may incidentally be apprised thereby of the fact that the defendant is covered by liability insurance. 68 However, where it is not necessary to bring to light the matter of insurance in questioning witnesses as to admissions of the defendant, such references are improper and should be omitted. 69 It has been said that counsel should be required to elicit the testimony in such a way as to preclude revelation of the irrelevant fact of insurance unless the reference to insurance is itself freighted with admission. 70 Of course, where the defendant does not admit liability, his mere statement that he carries insurance does not come within the exception concerning a reference to insurance as part of an admission by the defendant. 71

§ 487 When insurer is party to the action

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Under the statutes regarding liability insurance in some jurisdictions, it is proper to join the defendant's insurer as a party defendant, 72 and of course where that is the case, it is manifest to the jury that the defendant carries liability insurance. 73 But the fact that the existence of insurance was admissible, as where an insurance company is named as a defendant and there is independent substantive evidentiary relevance to the fact that each party is insured, does not mean that the court is bound, or even permitted to admit the amount of insurance coverage. 74 In a federal diversity case in which the court sits in a state, such as Louisiana, which has a direct action statute allowing the plaintiff to sue an insurer directly, the application of FRE Rule 411 has the above result. 75

When an insurer is a party of record, a division of authority exists as to the necessity of separate trials to avoid disclosure of the existence of liability coverage on the issue of liability for negligence. Where one of several issues at trial would have disclosed the existence of liability insurance coverage, a motion for a separate trial on that issue may be granted. 76 However, other cases have denied a motion for a separate trial made by a third-party defendant insurance company, where the presence of the insurance company, as a party of record, would reveal the existence of insurance, as in motor vehicle cases where the existence of liability coverage of automobiles was considered so common as to minimize any potential prejudice. 77

§ 488 Generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

While the introduction of evidence from which the jury is informed or may infer that the defendant carries liability insurance may be erroneous, the prejudicial or nonprejudicial effect of such an error is also to be considered, and in this respect the courts have taken into account various factors or circumstances. 78 For instance, a question or reference as to insurance will ordinarily not be deemed prejudicial where such question or reference is merely cumulative, the matter of insurance having been previously brought to the attention of the jury in some other way. 79 In cases where it does not appear that there is any necessary relationship between an allegedly objectionable question or testimony and liability insurance, it will usually be held that no prejudicial error has been committed. 80 Where a reference to insurance leaves it in doubt as to whether it is liability insurance which is referred to, or some other type of insurance, and where it is uncertain whether it is the plaintiff's or the defendant's insurance to which the evidence refers, the courts are inclined to regard the reference to insurance as relatively harmless. 81

◆ Observation: The weighing of alleged prejudice arising from statements of counsel, in an action based on negligence, which disclose an adverse party's liability insurance coverage is a matter within the trial judge's discretion, determined by the circumstances under which the statement was made. 82

◆ Caution: The conduct of the defendant's counsel may be such as to estop him from successfully making the objection that a question or testimony as to insurance is such prejudicial error as to require the declaration of a mistrial; or it may be that a motion for a mistrial will be refused because the defendant's counsel does not make a timely objection. 83 In other words, the failure of counsel to request proper instructions of caution to avoid prejudice or injury to a client may constitute a waiver of objections to improper references which have been made to liability insurance coverage. 84 And since the admission of evidence regarding the defendant's insurance can prejudice only the defendant, it cannot be made the basis for a new trial on the motion of the plaintiff after an adverse verdict. 85

Disclosure that the defendant carries insurance is not reversible error where the case is tried by the court without a jury. 86

But see Somach v Norris (Ala) 361 So 2d 1005, holding that references to insurance coverage during plaintiff's cross-examination, plaintiff's redirect examination, and closing argument amounted to reversible error whereas a single reference would have raised a question of waiver of objection.

§ 489 Reference to universal or mandatory automobile insurance

View Entire Section

In view of the general practice of automobile owners to purchase liability insurance, and of the general knowledge of jurors of the prevalence of such practice, evidence in an automobile accident case suggesting that the defendant is insured is not generally considered prejudicial to the defendant. 87 Clearly, where the insurance is compulsory, it is not error for plaintiff's counsel to so examine the defendant's witness as to elicit the fact that the defendant is insured. 88

§ 490 Cure of error

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

In regard to whether the error in injecting the question of insurance into the case may be cured by the exclusion of the objectionable matter or by an instruction to disregard it, the general rule appears to be that in the absence of anything indicating that the verdict returned was adversely affected, or anything to indicate persistent and studied attempts to bring the objectionable matter before the jury, prompt action in striking improper references to the defendant's insurance from the record, coupled with instructions admonishing the jury to disregard such matters, sufficiently protects the defendant's rights without requiring reversal of the judgment. 89

◆ Caution: A defendant may be estopped on appeal to claim prejudice from the trial court's failure to either declare a mistrial or give a cautionary instruction, if after the plaintiff makes a statement implying that the defendant was protected by liability insurance, the defendant does not exercise the option to request that a cautionary instruction be given. 90

However, there are cases in which the view is taken, or the circumstances are such, or the attempt is so deliberate, that the prejudicial effect of an attempt to inject improperly into the evidence in an accident case matters from which the jury might infer that the defendant was insured against liability cannot be cured by its exclusion and by instruction to the jury to disregard it. 91

Where the fact that defendant is insured is admissible, a trial court's admonitions to a jury at the trial's conclusion that they are not to consider the liability limits of the parties' insurance policies in determining who, if anyone, was negligent, does not suffice to cure the error of admitting the limits of insurance coverage. 92

§ 491 Where defendant opened door to reception of evidence

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Where the defendant's counsel opens the door to a certain line of inquiry, he cannot object if the inquiry when pursued by the plaintiff's counsel brings to light the fact that the defendant is covered by liability insurance. 93 In particular, under a statutory provision to the effect that when part of a conversation is given in evidence the whole on the same subject may be inquired into by the other parties, it has been held that where the defendant brings out on direct examination part of a conversation relative to an accident, the plaintiff may inquire fully into the entire conversation on cross-examination, although the fact that the defendant is insured is thereby incidentally disclosed. 94 Similarly, where the plaintiff injects the matter of insurance into the case, the defendant may establish the fact that he is not protected by liability insurance. 95

Where there is uncertainty as to whose insurance company the reference to insurance refers to or whether it is to liability insurance or some other type of insurance, the reference is harmless. 96

Where the defendant's counsel questioned a witness as to his occupation and received the answer, "I'm a special investigator," the plaintiff's counsel had the right on cross-examination to bring out the fact that the witness was employed by an insurance company and also the relationship of that insurance company to the case, since it might affect the credibility of the witness and the weight to be given his testimony. Leavitt v St. Louis Public Service Co. (Mo App) 340 SW2d 131.

§ 492 Determination, after verdict, whether evidence affected it

View Entire Section

Frequently, where the size of the verdict returned by the jury is not excessive, and the question of liability is reasonably clear, the court will conclude that evidence as to the defendant's insurance did not materially affect the verdict. 97 However, where the fact of insurance has been erroneously introduced in evidence by the plaintiff's counsel, who wilfully does so merely for the purpose of influencing a verdict or prejudicing the jury against the defendant, the introduction results in reversible error, at least where the evidence is conflicting and the case is a close one on its facts. 98

b. Admissibility on Issues Other Than Negligent or Wrongful Conduct [493-495]

§ 493 Generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Notwithstanding the general rule against the introduction of evidence suggesting or implying that the defendant is protected by liability insurance, 99 evidence that defendant was insured may be admissible on issues other than negligence. 1 The suggestion of the possession of insurance will not be avoided at the cost of suppressing evidence material to the establishment of a cause of action. 2 In other words, it is competent to show that the defendant carries liability or indemnity insurance where to do so tends to prove some material issue properly in the case; under such circumstances, the mere fact that it is not admissible to prove another matter does not render it incompetent.

A document otherwise admissible in evidence is not rendered inadmissible by the fact that it contains an incidental reference to insurance, nor will the receipt of such document in evidence constitute prejudicial error. 4 Furthermore, although it may be proper or advisable to keep from the jury the reference in the document to insurance where this is feasible, 5 this should not be done if such deletion would change the meaning or tenor of the document. 6

◆ Practice guide: The foundation for offering evidence of insurance coverage for a purpose other than to show liability or wrongful conduct must be established outside the presence of the jury to avoid prejudice to the rights of the parties. 7

Under the provision of Rule 411, as well as under similar state law, that exclusion of evidence of insurance against liability is not required when offered for another purpose, evidence may be admitted to prove an agency or employment relationship by showing that an employer or principal carries liability insurance on one alleged to be his employee or agent, where there is a dispute as to the existence of the employer-employee relationship or of an agency. 8 Evidence is also admissible to prove that defendant has control over certain property by using evidence that he insures himself against liability in connection with it. 9 Similarly, evidence is admissible to show that an instrumentality causing an injury is owned by the defendant. 10

§ 495 To prove bias, interest, or motive

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

In applying the rule excluding any testimony or statement to the effect that a defendant in a negligence action is insured, regard must be had to the right to cross-examine witnesses to show interest or bias, and this right is not to be abridged or denied because facts may incidentally be developed that are irrelevant to the issue and prejudicial to the other parties. Accordingly, facts tending to show interest, bias, or motive on the part of a witness may be elicited on cross-examination, although such examination may necessarily disclose that the defendant in a negligence action was protected by insurance.

11 However, a defendant cannot testify that he is insured in order to demonstrate that he is testifying honestly because he has no financial interest in the outcome of the case.

Under the provision of Rule 411 that exclusion of evidence of insurance against liability is not required when offered for another purpose, as well under similar state law, evidence has been admitted to impeach a witness by showing bias, interest, or motive affecting the witness's credibility, 13 or to establish the identity of the preparer of an impeaching document. 14

Where, under the pertinent state constitution, the legislature cannot define what is relevant or set aside evidentiary rules, a statute prohibiting admission of evidence that any witness is covered by professional liability insurance issued by a health care provider was found unconstitutional, so that the bias exception to Rule 411 applied. Therefore, evidence that the defense expert was health care insurer's vice president was admissible to show possible bias and prejudice. 15

As a general rule, where a previously written statement is produced in court and used for the purpose of impeaching the plaintiff or one of his witnesses, it is proper for the plaintiff's counsel to show that the person procuring such statement was a representative of the defendant's insurance company. 16 However, unless an open bona fide attack has been made on such a statement, it is improper to show that it was procured by an insurance adjuster. 17 Moreover, where there is no substantial variance between such statement and the plaintiff's testimony, the fact that the person procuring the statement was an insurance adjuster is wholly irrelevant. 18

7. Victim's Past Behavior in Rape Cases [496-506]

§ 496 Generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Under the Federal Rules of Evidence, admission of evidence of an alleged rape victim's past sexual behavior either in the form of reputation or opinion evidence ¹⁹ or any other type evidence ²⁰ is severely limited.

It has also been observed that such "rape shield" laws have been enacted by almost every state. ²¹ A concise version of such a law is also contained in the Uniform Rules of Evidence. ²² Generally speaking, these laws deny a defendant in a sexual assault case the opportunity to examine the complainant concerning her prior sexual conduct or reputation. They also deny a defendant the opportunity to offer extrinsic evidence of the prior sexual conduct or reputation of the complainant. ²³ These statutes are principally designed to prevent defense counsel from eliciting evidence of a victim's promiscuity as part of a general credibility attack, typically on the question of consent. ²⁴

Although Rule 412 makes no reference to the right of the victim to appeal an adverse ruling, the right of immediate appeal is implicit as a necessary corollary of the Rule's explicit protection of privacy interests. ²⁵

In excluding evidence under Rule 412, the court will also take into account whether or not the evidence is collateral to the issue of the alleged rape. ²⁶ For example, evidence of past sexual conduct introduced to challenge the general credibility of a witness, rather than her credibility with respect to specific testimony concerning the alleged rape, is collateral in nature and may be excluded as too prejudicial. 27

The policy of Federal Rules of Evidence 412, to guard against unwarranted intrusion into the victim's private life, may be taken into account in determining the amount of unfair prejudice under Federal Rules of Evidence 403. 28

◆ Observation: The nation's rape shield laws have been categorized into four approaches: the Michigan, Texas, Federal and California approaches. The rape shield laws which follow the Michigan approach are general prohibitions on prior sexual conduct or reputation evidence but have highly specific exceptions allowing for this evidence in those circumstances in which it is highly relevant and material to the presentation of a defense and therefore constitutionally required. The laws written under the Texas approach are purely procedural in nature and often involve untrammelled judicial discretion. The federal approach is characterized by a general prohibition of sexual conduct or reputation evidence, exceptions allowing for this evidence in circumstances where the evidence is undeniably relevant, and a general "catch-basin" provision allowing for introduction of relevant evidence on a case-by-case basis. The key feature of the California approach is that the sexual conduct or reputation evidence is separated into two categories—evidence offered to prove consent is generally inadmissible unless the evidence concerned prior sexual conduct between the complainant and the defendant, while any sexual conduct or reputation evidence may be used to attack the complainant's credibility as long as the trial court determines that it is relevant to the issue. 29

§ 497 "Past sexual behavior" defined

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

"Past sexual behavior" is defined, for the purpose of the federal rule, as sexual behavior other than the sexual behavior with respect to which rape or assault with intent to commit rape is alleged. 30 The term refers to sexual behavior at any time prior to trial, and not only to sexual behavior occurring prior to the date of the offense charged in the indictment. 31

The phrase "sexual behavior" means a volitional or non-volitional physical act that the victim has performed for the purpose of sexual stimulation or gratification of either the victim or another person or an act that is sexual intercourse, deviate sexual intercourse or sexual contact, or an attempt to engage in such an act, between the victim and another person. 32 Thus, such prior sexual conduct may have been consensual or the result of nonconsensual or assaultive behavior. 33

Books, movies, conversations, or observing others engaged in sexual activity are said to be sources of information as to sexual matters other than personal experience, and not sexual conduct. The act of writing about sexual desires or activities is not itself prior sexual conduct. 34

§ 498 Scope of federal rule

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

The Rule 412 proscriptions apply equally to the government and to the defendant. 35 The ban on sexual conduct evidence embraces evidence of the lack of sexual conduct, such as the victim's introduction of evidence of virginity, because such evidence is equally likely to provoke unfair prejudice. 36

◆ Observation: The Advisory Committee on the Rules of Criminal Procedure of the Judicial Conference of the United States has recommended changes to Federal Rule 412 which are intended to diminish some of the confusion engendered by the rule in its current form and expand the protection afforded to all persons who claim to be victims of sexual misconduct. The scope of the expanded rule would exclude evidence of an alleged victim's sexual history in civil as well as criminal cases, and would apply in all cases in which there is evidence that someone was the victim of sexual misconduct, without regard to whether the alleged victim or person accused is a party to the litigation. 37

§ 499 Public policy considerations

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Federal Rule 412 and similar state rape shield laws reflect the now virtually universal view that chastity is irrelevant to the veracity of a witness and sexual activity has no bearing on the issue of consent. 38 The theory of the rape shield statute, that prior sexual activity is not probative of the issue of rape unless one of the statutory exceptions obtains, applies not only to the victim's testimony on cross-examination but also to the testimony of other witnesses. 39

◆ Caution: A court has admitted evidence of a victim's sexual conduct reputation as probative of the defendant's state of mind based on what he knew about her reputation. 40

The principal purpose of Federal Rule 412 and similar state provisions is to protect the privacy of the victims 41 from the degrading and embarrassing disclosure of intimate details about their private lives. 42 This, in turn, encourages the reporting and prosecution of rapes. 43 Because the purpose of a rape shield statute is to protect the victims of crimes and not the accused, such a statute generally does not bar the admission of evidence of a defendant's prior sexual abuse of the victim. 44

§ 500 Constitutional implications of "rape shield" statutes

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

A rape shield statute generally does not on its face violate a defendant's constitutional right to present evidence, although such a statute may in a given case, as applied, impermissibly infringe upon a defendant's rights to confrontation and compulsory process. 45

The defendant's right of confrontation does not extend to matters that are irrelevant and have little or no probative value, such as the victim's reputation for chastity. 46

In a rape prosecution, preclusion of evidence of a prior sexual relationship between the alleged victim and the accused does not necessarily violate the rights of the accused under the Federal Constitution's Sixth Amendment to present relevant evidence, where such evidence is precluded as a sanction for the accused's failure to comply with a state statutory provision which requires the accused, if he proposes to offer evidence of his own past sexual conduct with the alleged rape victim, to file a written motion and an offer of proof within a certain number of days after his arraignment. 47 The decision whether the statutory notice requirement violates a defendant's right to confrontation must be made on a case by case basis. 48

§ 500 ----Constitutional implications of "rape shield" statutes [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

That victim in sexual assault prosecution may have subsequently had sex for money with someone other than defendant was presumptively irrelevant under rape-shield statute, and it shed no relevant light on issue whether she consented to sexual contact with defendant; hence, evidence of such conduct was properly rejected by trial court. People v Braley (1993, Colo App) 879 P2d 410, reh den (Jan 27, 1994).

In prosecution for sexual assault, evidence that complainant had sexual intercourse with four different men subsequent to alleged sexual assault was inadmissible under rape shield statute limiting evidence of complaining witness's "past sexual behavior"; evidence of sexual behavior after alleged assault is no less embarrassing or prejudicial, and is of no greater relevance at trial, than evidence of sexual behavior before alleged offense. Cuyler v State (1992, Tex App Austin) 841 SW2d 933.

Rape shield law must at times yield to defendant's constitutional right to cross-examine witnesses and to present defense but, before being allowed to introduce relevant but otherwise excluded evidence, defendant must make offer of proof establishing that prior act clearly occurred, act closely resembled those at issue in instant case, act is relevant to material issue, evidence is necessary to defendant's case and probative value of evidence outweighs its prejudicial effect. Cross-examination of a statutory rape complainant regarding prior accusations of sexual abuse and fondling and testimony of 3 prior persons accused that accusations against them were false will be allowed, regardless of whether or not such allegations are evidence of "past sexual behavior," because defendant's constitutional interests in confronting witnesses against him and presenting an adequate defense outweigh the possibility of embarrassment the complainant might suffer. United States v Stamper (WD NC) 766 F Supp 1396, 34 Fed Rules Evid Serv 69, affd without op (CA4 NC) 959 F2d 231, reported in full (CA4 NC) 34 Fed Rules Evid Serv 1432.

§ 501 Prior false charges by complainant

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

While it is clearly provided in the Uniform Rules of Evidence that the accused in a prosecution for rape or sexual assault may bring out, on cross-examination of the complaining witness, that she previously brought false charges of rape or sexual assault, 49 modern cases are in conflict on this issue, with some authority pointing toward the conclusion that the defense may do so, 50 and some pointing in the opposite direction. 51

A defendant who alleges an ongoing scheme of fabrication by the complainant with respect to charges of sexual abuse, has been permitted to introduce evidence of prior allegations of sexual abuse and the bias or motive of the complainant in making such allegations. 52

◆ Comment: According to some textwriters, it is clear that evidence that the complaining witness brought false charges previously is evidence which undercuts veracity, and by nature what is being proved in such cases is not the sexual conduct by the complaining witness, but false statements which directly relate to veracity. If the defense only knows that the complaining witness previously brought a complaint which led to prosecution and acquittal, it is of course true that the complainant may have told the truth before, so her prior conduct did not amount to an attempt to mislead or deceive. But that possibility is not sufficient to justify blocking cross-examination in the later case, for the cross-examiner's burden in this context should be no heavier than raising doubt as to the complainant's veracity. Yet there is some potential for humiliation of the complainant, and for confusion of issues, if the prior charges led to acquittal for reason other than the merits, and arguably good reason to disallow cross-examination where the only underlying facts are that the complainant previously made a complaint that did not lead to prosecution. 53

Trial court erred by excluding evidence that prosecuting witness had accused 10 or 12 people of sexual misconduct and later recanted some accusations, since rape shield law did not prohibit evidence that victim lied about sexual misconduct; evidence did not involve victim's past sexual conduct, but rather victim's propensity to make false statements regarding sexual misconduct. Smith v State, 259 Ga 135, 377 SE2d 158, cert den 493 US 825, 107 L Ed 2d 53, 110 S Ct 88.

Both Federal Rule 412⁵⁴ and Rule 412 of the Uniform Rules⁵⁵ provide for exceptions to the general rule of inadmissibility of evidence of the victim's past sexual behavior in certain instances where there is a proper foundation for admitting such evidence.⁵⁶

A trial court is justified in excluding proffered evidence of past sexual behavior when the proponent of the evidence fails to establish a proper purpose for its admission.⁵⁷ Evidence of prior sexual conduct is inadmissible under Federal Rule 412 where the tendered testimony regarding the victim's past sexual behavior does not encompass behavior with the defendant so as to illustrate consent, is not relevant to the issue of who actually was the source of semen or injury, and is never specifically offered as evidence constitutionally required to be admitted.⁵⁸

The foundation for admission of such evidence cannot be bolstered upon appeal.⁵⁹

◆ Caution: Even if otherwise admissible under one of the enumerated exceptions of Federal Rule 412(b), the exclusion of evidence of the complainant's past sexual behavior is proper under Rule 403 if the probative value of the evidence is outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice, confusion of the issues, or misleading the jury.⁶⁰

§ 503 --Admission of evidence constitutionally required

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

In a criminal case in which a person is accused of rape or of assault with intent to commit rape, evidence other than reputation or opinion evidence of a victim's past sexual behavior is admissible if the Constitution requires it to be admitted. 61

The first exception is intended to cover those instances where, because of an unusual set of circumstances if the general rule of inadmissibility were to be followed, it might deprive a defendant of the constitutional right to a fair trial. 62 Rule 412's constitutional exception embraces the accused's right to confront his victim with impeachment evidence consisting of prior sexual conduct where the government first opens the door on this line of cross-examination. 63 For example, when a victim testifies that she was a virgin prior to the rape the accused may cross-examine the complaining witness on prior specific sexual acts provided that the probative value of the proffered proof outweighs the resulting prejudice. 64

Illustrative of the first exception permitting evidence of specific instances of the victim's past sexual behavior if constitutionally required is a state prosecution for statutory rape in which defendant claimed that complainant's prior sexual behavior with other men was relevant in that it accounted for her belief that she was pregnant, which in turn motivated her to accuse defendant of rape to avoid the anger of a strict mother. In that case, the court held that the trial court's refusal to permit defendant to cross-examine the alleged victim on these points violated confrontation rights to bring out possible bias, prejudice, or ulterior motives. 65

§ 504 --Past sexual behavior with person other than person accused

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

In a criminal case in which a person is accused of rape or of assault with intent to commit rape, Federal Rule 412 provides that evidence other than reputation or opinion evidence of a victim's past sexual behavior is admissible if it consists of past sexual behavior with persons other than the accused and is offered by the accused upon the issue of whether the accused was or was not, with respect to the alleged victim, the source of semen or injury. 66 Under the analogous provision of the Uniform Rules, which is stated somewhat more broadly, exclusion is not required if the evidence of specific incidents of sexual behavior with one other than the accused is offered for a purpose other than consent, such as proof of the source of semen, pregnancy, disease, injury, mistake, or the intent of the accused. 67

A second exception under Federal Rule 412 applies when the accused claims that he had no relations with the alleged victim; he can use evidence of the victim's past sexual relations with others to rebut the victim's claim that the rape caused certain physical consequences, such as semen or injury. 68

However, evidence of past sexual conduct with others will be excluded if found to be irrelevant to the source of injury. 69

◆ Comment: According to some textwriters, evidence within the second exception does not involve an attempt to prove the conduct (or consent) of the victim by proof of her character, but rather involves an attempt to account for the injuries she suffered by proof that it was caused by someone other than the accused. Such evidence, according to the same textwriters, may be circumstantial. These textwriters have also opined that the term "injury" should be interpreted broadly to include not only bruises, abrasions, and similar indications of physical abuse, but pregnancy, which in the context of the alleged rape is in a real sense an injury. However, they caution that although the term "injury" could be read to encompass harm of a nonphysical nature, such as feared pregnancy and psychic trauma, such construction would give rise to a real risk of undermining the protections Federal Rule 412 is designed to accord. Thus, they say that if the term "injury" embraces psychological damage, the accused is likely to argue that the true causes of such damage lie in sexual experiences of the victim having no relation to the crime charged, and to offer as evidence in support of this defense the sexual history of the victim. 70

Under the Uniform Rules, the accused also may introduce evidence of the alleged victim's sexual behavior with persons other than the accused which occurs at the time of the event giving rise to the sexual offense alleged. 71

(FRE, Rule 412(b)(1)(A)), amended in 1994, provides for evidence of specific instances of sexual behavior by the alleged victim offered to prove a person other than the accused was the source of semen, injury, or other physical evidence.

Case authorities:

In a prosecution of defendant for first- degree statutory rape of his daughter, the trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to suppress evidence of defendant's molestation of another daughter several years earlier, since the daughter's testimony was sufficiently similar to that recounted by the victim concerning the manner of abuse to show a common plan or scheme, and remoteness in time did not make the daughter's testimony inadmissible because it was due to defendant's having almost no access to the daughters of his first marriage following his divorce. State v Jacob (1994) 113 NC App 605, 439 SE2d 812.

§ 506 Procedure in federal court for introducing evidence of victim's past behavior

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Counsel for defendants accused of committing a federal crime involving sexual abuse who intend to enter evidence of the victim's past sexual behavior as permitted within the limitations in Rule 412 75 must follow a specific procedure before such evidence may be admitted. 76 Before the person accused in federal court of committing a sex offense can introduce evidence of specific instances of the alleged victim's past sexual behavior in those situations allowed by Rule 412(b)(1) and (2), the following steps must be taken—

—a written motion to offer such evidence must be filed not later than 15 days before the date on which the trial in which such evidence is to be offered is scheduled to begin; the court may allow the motion to be made at a later date, including during trial, if the court determines either that the evidence is newly discovered and could not have been obtained earlier through the exercise of due diligence or that the issue to which such evidence relates has newly arisen in the case.

—the motion must be served on all other parties and on the alleged victim.

—the motion must be accompanied with a written offer of proof. 77

If the court determines that the offer of proof contains evidence described in Federal Rules of Evidence 412(b), the court must order a hearing in chambers to determine if such evidence is admissible. At the hearing the parties may call witnesses, including the alleged victim, and offer relevant evidence. 78

Notwithstanding Federal Rules of Evidence 104(b), 79 if the relevancy of the evidence which the accused seeks to offer in the trial depends upon the fulfillment of a condition of fact, the court, at the hearing in chambers or at a subsequent hearing in chambers scheduled for such purpose, will accept evidence on the issue of whether such condition of fact is fulfilled and will determine such issue. 80

If the court determines on the basis of the hearing in chambers that the evidence which the accused seeks to offer is relevant and that the probative value of such evidence outweighs the danger of unfair prejudice, such evidence will be admissible in the trial to the extent an order made by the court specifies evidence which may be offered and areas with respect to which the alleged victim may be examined or cross-examined. 81

◆ Comment: Some textwriters have taken the view that under Rule 412(c) only the judge should determine the admissibility of the evidence in question pursuant to Rule 104(a). In other words, regardless of the nature of factual questions which may arise in determining the admissibility of the proof, those questions are to be treated as questions of "admissibility" under Rule 104(a), and not as questions of conditional relevancy under Rule 104(b), which would call for judge and jury to play coordinate roles and thus substantially lessen the protection provided by the exclusionary doctrine. 82 They have also noted that the provision of Federal Rules of Evidence 412(c)(3) relating to the court order apparently does not apply to evidence which is "constitutionally required to be admitted" under Federal Rules of Evidence 412(b)(1), since Rule 412(b)(1) refers only to Rule 412(c)(1) and (2) as prescribing the appropriate procedure for evidence which is constitutionally required to be admitted, and not to Rule 412(c)(3). 83

The Uniform Rules of Evidence make no provision for notice or for an in camera hearing, as do many of the state and federal versions of Rule 412, since it was believed that existing rules of criminal procedure and the inherent power of the court to conduct proceedings in an orderly and fair manner provide adequate protection. 84 However, versions of the Uniform Rules enacted by some states follow the federal text in this regard. 85

§ 506 ----Procedure in federal court for introducing evidence of victim's past behavior [SUPPLEMENT]

Rules:

(FRE, Rule 412), amended in 1994, now applies to civil as well as criminal proceedings to exclude evidence of an alleged victim's past sexual behavior or alleged sexual predisposition, with certain exceptions. (FRE, Rule 412(b)(2) provides that in a civil case, evidence offered to prove the sexual behavior or sexual predisposition of any alleged victim is admissible if it is otherwise admissible under these rules and its probative value substantially outweighs the danger of harm to any victim and of unfair prejudice to any party. Evidence of an alleged victim's reputation is admissible only if it has been placed in controversy by the alleged victim.

(FRE, Rule 412(c)(1) and (2)), amended in 1994, now set forth the procedure to determine admissibility of evidence of an alleged victim's past sexual behavior and provides for written notice at least 14 days before trial unless the court requires a different time for filing, and provides for service of the motion and for an in camera hearing, and for the motion, related papers, and the record of the hearing to be sealed and remain under seal unless the court orders otherwise. As to rules allowing evidence of defendant's prior sexual assaults and child molestation, (Federal Rules of Evidence, Rules 413-415), added by Congress in 1994; see § 404.

8. Evidence of Compromise and Offers to Compromise [507-516]

§ 507 Generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Both Federal Rule 408 and Rule 408 of the Uniform Rules provide that evidence of (1) furnishing or offering or promising to furnish, or (2) accepting or offering or promising to accept, a valuable consideration in compromising or attempting to compromise a claim which was disputed as to either validity or amount, is not admissible to prove liability for or invalidity of the claim or its amount. Evidence of conduct or statements made in compromise negotiations is likewise not admissible. 86

◆ Definition: An "offer to compromise" is generally defined as the settlement of differences by mutual concessions; an adjustment of conflicting claims. 87

Rule 408 does not require the exclusion of any evidence otherwise discoverable merely because it is presented in the course of compromise negotiations; 88 nor does it require such exclusion when evidence is offered for another purpose, such as proving bias or prejudice of a witness, negating a contention of undue delay, or proving an effort to obstruct a criminal investigation or prosecution. 89 The Rule, while phrased in terms of offers of compromise, must be similarly applied with respect to completed compromises when offered against party thereto, although such a situation will not ordinarily occur, except when a party to the present litigation has compromised with a third person. 90

Although it is error for a court to admit evidence of a settlement agreement for the jury's consideration in determining liability and the quantum of damages, the verdict and judgments will not be reversed unless prejudice is shown. 91

◆ Observation: Whenever the possibility of jury confusion substantially outweighs the probative value of evidence, it may be excluded. Evidence of a compromise or settlement may be excluded on this basis, even where it is not introduced for the purpose of establishing liability on the part of one of the settling parties. 92

§ 507 ----Generally [SUPPLEMENT]

§ 508 Public policy considerations

View Entire Section

Rule 408 is designed to foster full and free discussion and negotiations in order to encourage out-of-court settlements, 93 eliminating much of the concern with technicalities which riddled the common-law rule, and it should be interpreted with that policy in mind. 94 The rule reflects the reality that permitting consideration of settlement offers as reflecting an admission of liability in the amount of the offer would seriously discourage parties from discussing settlement or making settlement offers. 95 An additional principle underlying the Rule is that the evidence is irrelevant as being motivated by a desire for peace rather than from a concession of the merits of the claim. 96

§ 509 Requisites for invocation of Rule

In order that such evidence of compromise or offer to compromise will be excluded under Rule 408, it is required that——there is a claim.

—the claim is disputed as to either validity or amount. 97

—the purpose of offering the evidence is to prove the validity or invalidity of the claim or its amount. 98

—valuable consideration is furnished or offered to be furnished, or accepted or offered to be accepted.

Rule 408 does not define what constitutes "valuable consideration." While generally understood to mean something such as money or anything having monetary value, a "valuable consideration" technically consists of the acquisition of some legal right by the promisor, in return for which he makes the promise, or in the giving up of some legal right by the promisee, in return for which the promise is made to him. 99

§ 510 Conduct or statements during compromise negotiations, generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Evidence of conduct or statements made in compromise negotiations is not admissible. 1
In order to be excludible under Federal Rules of Evidence 408 statements must (1) be made in settlement negotiations, 2 (2) relate to issues involved in the proceedings, 3 and (3) offer to compromise or settle any claim in the action being litigated. 4 Read literally, Federal Rules of Evidence 408 does not appear to cover compromises and compromise offers that do not involve a dispute that is the subject of the suit, even if one of the parties to the suit was also a party to the compromise. However, even where the settlement relates to prior claims that arguably arose out of different events and transactions, where these claims are related inasmuch as they arose in the course of the same large scale project operated by the defendant, and the claims sued upon are similar enough to be relevant, there is a sufficient basis for bringing the evidence concerning the compromises and settlements under the umbrella of Rule 408. 5

Federal Rule of Evidence 408 does not prevent the same party who submitted the material in the course of settlement discussions from using the material later at trial, because Rule 408 is designed to avoid one party using material against the party who submitted the material for settlement purposes. 6

◆ Caution: A party waives its right to object to admission of evidence under Federal Rules of Evidence 408 where it fails to make timely and specific objections on the grounds stated in Rule 408, but rather objects to the evidence for other reasons. 7 Furthermore, where testimony relating to an offer of compromise is permitted for the sole purpose of calculating damages, the court should not advert to it in deciding the issue of liability; otherwise it might be a ground for reversal of the judgment, since Rule 408 makes compromise offers inadmissible in evidence. 8

§ 511 --How to determine what is a compromise negotiation

Courts have regarded discussions between two parties as settlement negotiations where (1) after the plaintiff had filed an action, 9 the parties met to talk about their interpretation of the matter in dispute, with the assistance of outside counsel, 10 and counsel for the parties agreed that the discussions in the meeting would not be later used for any purpose; 11 and (2) it was contemplated that litigation might be necessary, counsel for the parties having conceded in a written communication between themselves that litigation was possible. 12

Where the point of threatened litigation has not been reached, communications between parties are not considered compromise negotiations. 13 Thus, in business communications between companies which have not crystallized to such a point, 14 an admission in a conversation during an informal investigation, 15 an effort to head off a criminal prosecution rather than resolve a civil claim, 16 and a mere effort to buy time in which to pay an obligation, even though the validity of the obligation is later disputed 17 have been considered admissible as outside the rule. Moreover, one who is not a party to a settlement may invoke the protection of Rule 408 to exclude evidence of the settlement. 18

Uniform Rule 408 explicitly provides that compromise negotiations encompass mediation. 19

◆ Caution: The admission of any statement made during, or any document prepared for, any kind of conciliation effort at least raises a Rule 408 issue. 20

§ 512 Applicability of Rule in criminal cases

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

While Rule 408 has been applied in criminal cases to exclude evidence with respect to plea bargaining by representatives of the government with the defendant, 21 it should be noted that Rule 410 generally governs admissibility of evidence of guilty pleas and plea negotiations. 22 It has been held that the rule excluding from evidence offers of compromise or settlement of a claim which is disputed as to either validity or amount applies only to civil litigation, since the reference to "a claim which was disputed as to either validity or amount" does not easily embrace an attempt to bargain over criminal charges. Negotiations over immunity from criminal charges or a plea bargain do not ordinarily constitute discussions of a "claim" over which there is a dispute as to "validity" or "amount." 23

Rule 408 governs the admission of related civil settlement negotiations in a criminal trial. 24 Thus, in a criminal prosecution for obtaining duplicate paychecks by fraud, in which a prosecution witness testified that defendant had admitted knowledge of an administrative error causing the duplicate checks to be issued, where defense counsel elicited from such witness on cross-examination that defendant had subsequently agreed to a repayment schedule, it was held that defense counsel could not later complain that the testimony about the repayment schedule was inadmissible and that he was merely "forced" to introduce such testimony. The court stated that even though such testimony might otherwise have been barred by Rule 408 as a settlement offer, this testimony was solicited by defense counsel on cross-examination and appeared to have been a calculated, tactical defense decision. 25

◆ Comment: One commentator has observed that there are good reasons why Rule 408 should, along with Rule 410, apply to plea bargaining in criminal cases. The last sentence of the Rule, which makes it clear that the exclusionary principle does not reach proof of an effort to obstruct a criminal investigation or prosecution, would hardly be necessary if Rule 408 applied only in civil litigation. Moreover, statements and offers made by the Government during plea bargaining are customarily considered inadmissible when offered by the defendant, and Rule 410 does not appear to reach these; an unwarranted gap is thus closed if Rule 408 applies in this context. 26

In prosecution for knowingly selling counterfeit works of art, evidence of defendant's prior settlement with FTC was admissible notwithstanding Rules 408 and 404 since it served alternative purposes: it showed that defendant was on notice when he subsequently sold other prints that those prints were forgeries, that defendant knew he could not sell prints without reporting sale to FTC, facts from FTC case provided background for defendant's indictment and laid evidentiary foundation for many of government's exhibits in criminal proceeding, and stipulation itself constituted direct judicial admission to accusation of fraud in conduct underlying indictment. United States v Austin (1995, CA7 Ill) 54 F3d 394, reh den (1995, CA7 Ill) 1995 US App LEXIS 15724.

§ 513 Applicability to third party settlement, generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Rule 408 applies to the case where the settlement agreement is entered into between a litigant and a third party, not just to the case where the agreement is between the two litigants themselves. 27 Therefore, a defendant cannot prove the invalidity or amount of a plaintiff's claim by proof of plaintiff's settlement with a third person, nor can plaintiff show the defendant's liability or extent of liability by proof of defendant's settlement with a third person. 28

◆ Observation: While Rule 408 is more commonly invoked to bar the admission of agreements between a defendant and a third party to compromise a claim arising out of the same transaction as the one being litigated, 29 the Rule also bars evidence of settlements between plaintiffs and third party joint tortfeasors or former co-defendants. 30 If the policies underlying Rule 408 mandate that settlements may not be admitted against a defendant who has recognized and settled a third party's claim against him, it is axiomatic that those policies likewise prohibit the admission of settlement evidence against a plaintiff who has accepted payment from a third party against whom he has a claim. 31

Evidence of a third party's payment of a significant settlement amount to the plaintiff may not be admitted on behalf of the defendant to show that the actions of such third party were the cause in fact of the plaintiff's damages, because evidence of causation or noncausation is fully subsumed under the Rule's prohibition of evidence concerning the validity or invalidity of a claim. 32

§ 514 --Evidence of settlement in separate lawsuit

--

Evidence of a settlement in a different law suit may be excluded under Rule 408. 33 While a literal reading of the rule suggests an application solely to negotiations or compromises involving the claim being litigated, the rationale behind the rule applies in circumstances in which a plaintiff attempts to introduce evidence of a settlement involving the same defendant but a different plaintiff. If such evidence were routinely allowed in subsequent law suits, it would give any litigant pause before settling. 34

§ 515 Admissibility of otherwise discoverable evidence presented during compromise negotiations

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Neither Federal Rules of Evidence 408 nor Uniform Rule 408 requires the exclusion of evidence that is otherwise discoverable merely because it is presented in the course of compromise negotiations. 35 This provision does not make material which exists only because of settlement negotiations admissible against the party who submitted the material, but rather allows the discovery and admission of material which exists independently of the settlement negotiations even though such material was disclosed during the negotiations. 36 Thus, a party cannot immunize from admissibility documents otherwise discoverable merely by offering them in a compromise negotiation. 37 Furthermore, Rule 408 does not preclude the discovery of settlement discussions which culminate in a settlement under circumstances where the plaintiff seeks only to discover the documents and not to admit them into evidence at trial. 38

◆ Comment: The intent of Federal Rules of Evidence 408 is to foster settlement negotiations by limiting the admission of evidence produced during settlement negotiations for the purpose of proving liability at trial; the rule was never intended to be a broad discovery privilege. 39 Furthermore, the policy of Federal Rules of Evidence 408 would not be served by excluding from discovery documents relating to

§ 516 Admissibility where offered for other purposes

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Evidence of compromise or offers of compromise is admissible if the evidence is offered for a purpose other than establishing the validity or amount of a claim, such as proving bias or prejudice of a witness, negating a contention of undue delay, or proving an effort to obstruct a criminal investigation or prosecution. 41 For example, Rule 408 specifically allows an exception for items used to prove a consequential material fact at issue other than the claim's validity or its amount. 42 Moreover, evidence of statements made in the course of settlement negotiations will be admitted even if offered for a purpose other than one of the purposes specifically named in Rule 408. 43

An eventual settlement between the plaintiff and the defendant insurance company is not admissible as an exception to Rule 408 where offered for the purpose of showing bad faith, as an eventual settlement does not indicate that an initial denial of insurance coverage was in bad faith. 44

It is within the discretion of the trial court whether to admit evidence for another purpose.

45 In making its determination, a court must balance both the weight of the policy considerations behind the rule against the need for the evidence, 46 and the relevance of the evidence against its prejudicial effect. 47 The better practice is to exclude evidence of compromises or compromise offers when it is doubtful whether the evidence is offered for another purpose. 48 Moreover, the decision to exclude or admit evidence under Rule 408 will not be reversed absent a clear abuse of discretion. 49

◆ Observation: The rationale underlying the common law rule that gave rise to Rule 408 was to exclude the offer of compromise only when it was tendered as an admission of the weakness of the offering party's claim or defense, not when the purpose is otherwise. 50

Except when admitted for special purposes, 51 evidence of the following is not admissible pursuant to Federal Rules of Evidence 410, in any federal civil or criminal proceeding, against the defendant who made the plea or was a participant in the plea discussions:

- (1) a plea of guilty which was later withdrawn;
- (2) a plea of nolo contendere;
- (3) any statement made in the course of any proceeding under Rule 11 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure or comparable state procedures regarding either of the foregoing pleas, or
- (4) any statement made in the course of plea discussions with an attorney for the prosecuting authority which do not result in a plea of guilty or which result in a plea of guilty later withdrawn. 52

However, such a statement is admissible in any proceeding in which another statement made in the course of the same plea or plea discussions has been introduced and the statement ought in fairness to be considered contemporaneously with it, or in a criminal proceeding for perjury or false statement if the statement was made by the defendant under oath, on the record and in the presence of counsel. 53

The Uniform Rules of Evidence contain a similar provision, under which evidence of a plea later withdrawn, of guilty, or an admission of the charge, or nolo contendere, or of an offer so to plead to the crime charged or any other crime, or of statements made in connection with any of the foregoing withdrawn pleas or offers, is not admissible in any civil or criminal action, case, or proceeding against the person who made the plea or offer. 54

Federal Rule 410 by its terms deals only with pleas and plea negotiations in criminal cases. 55

The essence of plea bargaining is negotiation, and a precondition of successful negotiations is an assurance of confidentiality which will encourage the candid give-and-take essential to reaching an agreeable compromise. 56 Federal Rules of Evidence 410 is designed to promote active plea negotiations and to encourage frank

Admission of drug defendant's guilty plea to felony menacing was not plain error, even if it did not qualify as conviction since defendant was given probation, suspended sentence and case was subsequently dismissed; no substantive rights were prejudiced by its admission and defendant opened door for cross-examination about it by testifying in detail about circumstances surrounding it. United States v Swanson (1993, CA8 Minn) 9 F3d 1354.

District court did not abuse its discretion in excluding evidence of surveyor's 12-year-old conviction for conspiracy to defraud shipping companies by falsifying surveys in exchange for bribes in instant action by shipper against carrier for cargo damage, given age of conviction and witness's claim that guilty plea on which conviction was based was coerced. American Home Assurance Co. v American President Lines (1994, CA9 Cal) 44 F3d 774, 95 CDOS 7, 95 Daily Journal DAR 35.

The trial court did not err in a first-degree murder resentencing by failing to strike plea agreements in which the State accepted guilty pleas to felony murder only. The plea bargain served only to limit the maximum time the defendant would serve in prison if the jury failed to recommend a sentence of death and did not "suppress" an aggravating circumstance supported by evidence or otherwise limit the sentence the jury could recommend for first-degree murder. State v Green (1994) 336 NC 142, 443 SE2d 14.

§ 518 Withdrawn guilty pleas

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

A withdrawn guilty plea is not, except under certain limited circumstances, 58 admissible against the defendant who made the plea, in any civil or criminal proceeding. 59 Admission of such pleas would reduce the act of withdrawal to a meaningless gesture, 60 and this policy is reflected in Federal Rules of Evidence 410. Nevertheless, the exclusion of an offer to plead guilty is only required where the evidence is offered against the defendant, and where the defendant personally seeks to introduce such evidence it may be admitted, where relevant. 61

Federal Rules of Evidence 410 does not prohibit the use of unwithdrawn guilty pleas, and a statement made by a witness at the time of pleading guilty is admissible for collateral use to impeach such testimony at a subsequent trial. 62 Use of such statements is only prohibited when used against the person who made the plea and after that person has withdrawn the plea of guilty. 63

A state may not enter into a plea agreement, obtain a statement thereunder, abort the agreement, and then use the statements in its case in chief at trial on the merits. 64 The reason for the State's repudiation of the agreement is immaterial with respect to the admissibility of the statement. The justification of the rescission, repudiation, or breach of the agreement by the State goes to whether the defendant is entitled to have the agreement enforced; it does not affect the admissibility of the statement obtained under it. 65

§ 519 Nolo contendere pleas

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

The Federal and Uniform Rule both make inadmissible a plea of nolo contendere or an offer to plead nolo contendere, against the person making the plea in any subsequent civil or criminal action, 66 thus giving effect to the principal characteristic of such a plea, the avoidance of any admission of guilt which is inherent in a guilty plea. 67 Accordingly, the rule prohibits admitting a defendant's nolo contendere plea to a criminal charge regarding an incident as an admission by a party in a wrongful death action arising from the same incident. 68 Moreover, the government may not use a nolo plea to prove that a defendant had admitted guilt by the plea and thereby meet its initial burden of proving the defendant committed the act. 69

The erroneous admission of a prior nolo contendere plea will not lead to a reversal of defendant's convictions where before the defendant was questioned about the plea he had already admitted the conduct that formed the basis of it, so that the additional fact of the plea added little to what the jury already knew and the trial judge instructed the jury to consider only those crimes alleged in the indictment. 70

Rule 410 contemplates a situation where a nolo contendere plea is sought to be used against the pleader in a subsequent civil or criminal action in which he or she is the defendant. 71 Where the person who entered the prior no-contest plea is now a plaintiff in a civil action, use of the no-contest plea for estoppel purposes is not "against the defendant" within the meaning of Rule 410. 72 Thus, even though a guilty plea is not conclusive for purposes of collateral estoppel, a guilty plea is admissible in a subsequent civil action on the independent ground that it is an admission. 73

◆ Comment: Some writers have stated that Federal Rules of Evidence 410 was not designed to require exclusion of proof of a judgment or conviction based upon a nolo contendere plea, where such a conviction has independent nonhearsay significance. 74

Although Federal Rules of Evidence 410 precludes the admission of a nolo contendere plea, the underlying facts are not insulated from admissibility under Federal Rules of Evidence 404(b). 75

Trial court in personal injury action arising from automobile accident, as result of which defendant driver pleaded guilty to charge of driving under influence of alcohol, properly excluded evidence of defendant's two prior nolo contendere pleas to similar charges on issue of plaintiff's entitlement to award of punitive damages, but erred in admitting evidence of such pleas as to issue of amount of such damages, but evidence establishing commission of such prior offenses other than nolo pleas or disposition would be admissible. Holt v Grinnell (1994) 212 Ga App 520, 441 SE2d 874, 94 Fulton County D R 1070, cert den (1994, Ga) 1994 Ga LEXIS 703.

§ 520 Plea bargaining statements, generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Evidence of any statement made in the course of plea discussions with an attorney for the prosecuting authority which do not result in a plea of guilty or which result in a plea of guilty later withdrawn is not admissible in any civil or criminal proceeding against the defendant who was a participant in the plea discussions. 76 The inadmissibility of inculpatory admissions made during the course of such negotiations, as part of the government's case in chief, is not dependent upon the defendant being represented by counsel at the bargaining stage. 77

Rule 410 will not apply—

—where a guilty plea is accepted and not withdrawn. 78

—where the defendant is bargaining solely for leniency for third persons, since it is within the contemplation of the parties that the negotiating defendant will go to trial even if the negotiations are successful. 79

—to testimony by government witnesses concerning offers to co-operate in the future, where a defendant spontaneously offers co-operation and attendant admissions are made without attaching conditions concerning plea bargaining. 80

—where there was no "plea bargain" 81 and the defendant did not agree to plead guilty on any charges 82 or even discuss doing so in exchange for leniency on other charges, and no evidence was obtained against the defendant as a result of his co-operation. 83

—to testimony given before a grand jury pursuant to a completed plea bargain from which the defendant later withdraws and goes to trial, since such testimony is not given in an attempt to obtain concessions in exchange for his plea. 84

—to statements made by a person co-operating with government law enforcement efforts at a time when no charges have been lodged or considered. 85

—to statements made during plea discussions at the sentencing stage of a criminal proceeding because Rule 1101(d)(3) expressly excludes the application of the Federal Rules of Evidence, other than with respect to privileges, at sentencing. 86

§ 520 ----Plea bargaining statements, generally [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

In prosecution for bank fraud and conspiracy and obstructing investigation of that fraud, evidence of defendant's discussions with federal agents for debriefing in accordance with terms of his plea agreement was highly relevant to crimes charged and not hearsay, since no party suggested that federal agents' conduct at debriefings were offered as truthful assertions and their statements were offered to show effect they had, not for their truth. United States v Ballis (1994, CA5 Tex) 28 F3d 1399, reh, en banc, den (1994, CA5 Tex) 1994 US App LEXIS 31223.

Government was properly permitted to use defendant's plea bargaining proffer statements to rebut defense witness's testimony since defendant waived any objection to such use by signing proffer letter prior to plea negotiations that specifically precluded government's use of defendant's statements in its case in chief but specifically provided that they could be used as rebuttal evidence. United States v Dortch (1993, CA7 Ill) 5 F3d 1056, 37 Fed Rules Evid Serv 1033, petition for certiorari filed (Nov 18, 1993) and petition for certiorari filed (Dec 20, 1993).

Admission of statement which defendant made during plea negotiations was not erroneous since it was admitted only as to codefendant who did not participate in plea negotiations. United States v Testa (1994, CA7 Ill) 33 F3d 747.

Defendant's statements made during plea bargain proffer were admissible for impeachment purposes where defendant signed proper waiver. United States v Maldonado (1994, CA7 Ill) 38 F3d 936, 40 Fed Rules Evid Serv 495.

By statute, statements made during plea negotiations are not admissible. State v Nicholson (1994, App) 187 Wis 2d 687, 523 NW2d 573.

§ 521 --Necessary elements of plea discussion

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Rule 410 applies only to statements made in the course of plea negotiations, which are defined as discussions in advance of the time of pleading with the view to an agreement whereby the defendant will enter a plea in hope of receiving certain charge or sentence concessions. 87 For example, a pretrial meeting between the defendant, his retained counsel, the prosecuting attorney, and two government agents to discuss the possibility of the defendant's co-operation with the government may be considered as part of the overall plea bargaining process. 88 However, statements made by defense counsel about the strengths or weaknesses of the government's case do not count as an attempt to negotiate a plea. 89

Plea bargaining negotiations under Rule 410 must include a discussion, 90 or a written communication 91 between a government attorney, 92 and counsel for the accused where the government conveys an offer to allow pleading to a lesser charge, 93 and the accused possesses a subjective intent to enter into a plea bargain where the expectation is reasonable given the totality of the circumstances. 94

The understanding of the accused at the time the statements were made has been an important factor in determining whether statements were made in the course of plea negotiations in a number of cases, 95 particularly where the proposed bargain was not consummated. 96 In this regard, it has been said that a statement may be considered to have been made in the course of plea negotiations if: (1) the suspect exhibited an actual subjective expectation that he was negotiating a plea at the time of the discussion; and (2) the suspect's expectation was reasonable given the totality of the circumstances. 97 A defendant's expectation that he was involved in a plea negotiation has been found not to have been reasonable where the defendant made statements to members of the clergy who were not agents for the state and did not purport to be, and where the statements were made before there was any discussion as to the role such clergypersons would play in helping the defendant obtain leniency. 98

Statements made by defendant/attorney charged with wire fraud and money laundering were not made in course of plea negotiations so as to be inadmissible since no plea bargain was offered or even contemplated at time he made statements in issue; defendant was attorney familiar with Sentencing Guidelines and aware that offenses with which he could be charged were serious, and his statements to FBI and IRS agent who came to his office and to Assistant U.S. Attorney were offered unconditionally in effort to cooperate, perhaps in hopes of improving his situation and eventually gaining motion for substantial assistance at sentencing. United States v Hare (1995, CA8 Mo) 49 F3d 447, reh den (1995, CA8 Mo) 1995 US App LEXIS 7619.

§ 522 --Plea offer

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

An offer to plead guilty or nolo contendere to the crime charged or any other crime and statements related to these pleas are generally inadmissible. 99

The policy of promoting plea discussions between defendants and the government would be substantially undermined by allowing a defendant to use the government's offer to plea bargain as evidence in his or her favor. 1 Neither the prosecution nor the defense is permitted to introduce evidence of such an offer made in the course of plea negotiations, because the underlying intent of the rule is to prohibit the introduction of any evidence which would be adverse to a fair trial. 2

§ 523 --Participation of government attorney

View Entire Section

Federal Rules of Evidence 410 excludes evidence of plea discussions with an attorney of the prosecuting authority. 3 Although courts still require the participation of a government attorney, 4 some courts have relaxed this requirement by not requiring the attorney's actual physical presence when a particular statement is made to a government agent, 5 provided the government attorney expressly authorizes the bargain the government agent strikes with the accused. 6 For example, there is no plea bargaining discussion when a defendant, not charged with a crime, is told by the officer that he lacks authority to plea bargain. 7 In an exceptional situation, plea negotiations with other than an attorney may be inadmissible where due to government misrepresentations, the accused exhibits an actual subjective expectation to negotiate a plea at the time of the discussion and the expectation is reasonable, given the totality of the circumstances. 8 The courts which allow government agents to negotiate with defendants provided the government attorney expressly authorizes the bargain the agent strikes with the accused recognize that without this proviso government attorneys might attempt to avoid the operation of the rules by authorizing law enforcement officials to conduct plea negotiations. 9

◆ Caution: While the Federal version of Rule 410(4) limits inadmissibility to statements made in the course of plea discussions with an attorney for the prosecuting authority, some states do not limit application of Rule 410 to discussions involving an attorney for the State. 10 At least one state has expressly rejected any reading of Rule 410 which would limit its application to discussions involving an attorney for the prosecuting authority, stating that such a per se rule, which turns on the actual authority of the government representative to negotiate a plea, is capable of working substantial injustice in many cases. 11 Limiting Rule 410 solely to discussions involving an attorney for the prosecuting authority can easily prejudice an accused who made damaging admissions when he thought he was making an offer to plead after having explicitly waived constitutional protections. Basic fairness to an accused who in good faith makes a reasonable attempt to engage in plea negotiations requires that the State be foreclosed from using an accused's well-intentioned but misdirected efforts against him at trial should plea negotiations ultimately break down. 12

§ 524 Use of pleas and plea bargaining statements for other purposes

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

A statement made in the course of any proceeding regarding a guilty plea which is later withdrawn, a plea of nolo contendere, or a statement made in the course of plea discussions with an attorney for the prosecuting authority which do not result in a plea of guilty or which result in a plea of guilty later withdrawn, is admissible (1) in any proceeding wherein another statement made in the course of the same plea or plea discussions has been introduced and the statement ought in fairness be considered contemporaneously with it; or (2) in a criminal proceeding for perjury or false statement if the statement was made by the defendant under oath, on the record, and in the presence of counsel. 13

Evidence of pleas, offers to plead, and plea bargaining statements cannot be introduced against the accused for impeachment purposes, 14 but such evidence does not impede a defendant's impeachment of prosecution witnesses concerning their own pleas, plea bargaining and agreements with the government whenever these may bear upon their credibility, since the proof is offered against the prosecuting authority and not the witnesses. 15

A trial court may properly refuse to limit questioning of the defendant as to a withdrawn guilty plea where the prosecution gives notice that should the defendant take the witness stand cross-examination will include questions regarding the facts surrounding the withdrawn guilty plea for the purpose of seeking a perjury indictment against the defendant for contradicting the prior sworn statement given in the course of the proceeding regarding the guilty plea which was later withdrawn. 16

§ 524 ----Use of pleas and plea bargaining statements for other purposes

Case authorities:

Brother's plea allocution, which satisfies both Confrontation Clause and FRE 804(b)(3), need not be excluded under FRE 403, even though allocution, in which he admits existence of conspiracy and his provision of silencer-equipped gun in connection with robbery of post office truck, is clearly prejudicial, where other brother has already pleaded guilty to robbery and conspiracy but not murder, because such evidence will not cause "unfair prejudice" but will lead to decision on merits. United States v Gallego (1996, SD NY) 913 F Supp 209.

Plea agreements of Sherman Act defendant's coconspirators were properly admitted since otherwise jury could not properly assess coconspirators' credibility as witnesses, which was relevant to establishing underlying facts that formed basis of defendant's conviction, and trial court sought to prevent any misunderstanding or misuse of pleas by giving jury detailed instructions. United States v Gaev (1994, CA3 Pa) 24 F3d 473, 1994-1 CCH Trade Cases ¶ 70578, reh, en banc, den (1994, CA3 Pa) 1994 US App LEXIS 12699.

Statements which defendant made in course of plea negotiations should not have been admitted to impeach his inconsistent trial testimony, but admission was harmless as to cocaine conspiracy conviction since defendant admitted during direct examination to participating in it; admission was harmful on possession count, however, since it was based on credibility decision by jury. United States v Acosta-Ballardo (1993, CA10 NM) 8 F3d 1532, 38 Fed Rules Evid Serv 370.

In prosecution for theft and criminal mischief, defendant was not entitled to introduce testimony of absent codefendant's guilty plea on basis of unavailability, where defendant did not attempt to procure attendance of codefendant by process or other means, even though codefendant was on supervised probation through same trial court; fact that state subpoenaed codefendant was immaterial, since rule requires party seeking to have statement admitted to make good faith effort to procure attendance of witness. Register v

§ 525 Antecedent criminal preparations

--

In a criminal prosecution, evidence showing preparation for the commission of the crime charged is admissible for the state. 17 Thus, in a prosecution for the sale of a controlled substance, evidence of a defendant's acts of altering the amounts of drugs or prescriptions in his possession, approximately one week prior to the alleged sale of a controlled substance for which he was being prosecuted, is evidence of preparation for the commission of the crime charged and is admissible. 18

Evidence in explanation of such antecedent preparations is admissible for the accused, 19 and, to rebut the inference arising from such preparations, the accused may give in evidence any circumstance tending to show innocent motives. 20

§ 525 ----Antecedent criminal preparations [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

There was no error in a murder prosecution in the admission of testimony that defendant had been seen in possession of a black rifle with a clip on the bottom and "a long handle that pulled back" where no murder weapon was produced at trial, but a federal firearms form was introduced which showed that an individual who identified himself as defendant purchased a .22 caliber semiautomatic rifle which a fifteen-round clip and retracting stock, and the pathologist indicated that the victim's wounds had been caused by a .22- caliber weapon. When no weapon is found in a defendant's possession at the time of his arrest or thereafter, testimony that defendant had once owned or possessed a weapon becomes especially relevant. State v Ysut Mlo (1994) 335 NC 353, 440 SE2d 98.

11. Suggestive Matters After Acts or Offenses [526-543]

a. Civil Cases [526-529]

§ 526 Generally

View Entire Section Go to Parallel Reference Table Go to Supplement
--

Evidence of the acts or conduct of a person subsequently to the time of a transaction in controversy which are indicative of his state of mind in the doing of an act or which are suggestive of the fact of one's connection with that transaction, 21 and which afford reasonable inferences or throw any light upon the subject matter contested, 22 or upon which any reasonable inference or presumption can be founded as to the truth or falsity of the issue or of a disputed fact, 23 is generally admissible in the trial of a civil action. 24 For example, it has been held that a trustworthy method of determining the existence of an agreement whereby one person binds himself to pursue a prescribed course of conduct over a given period of time is to determine whether that person actually followed the prescribed course of conduct during that time, or whether he deemed himself unrestricted by the agreement. 25 It must be borne in mind, however, that the law requires an open and visible connection between the principal and evidentiary facts and the deductions from them, and does not permit a decision to be made on remote inferences. 26

Acts suggesting that the present contention of a litigant is false or an exaggeration or an afterthought are admissible in evidence. 27 Thus, one's failure to complain or to make a claim may be a circumstance which may be proved as indicating the nonexistence of a ground of complaint or of the basis of a claim. 28 Similarly, it may be proved that one's adversary recognized the validity of a demand which he now disputes or in the past occupied a position inconsistent with his present one. 29

The rule that evidence of flight of a person suspected of or charged with wrongdoing is admissible against him, which rule is largely confined to defendants in criminal proceedings, 30 may find application in civil cases where the defendant leaves the jurisdiction to avoid service of summons upon him. 31 However, such evidence is merely corroborative in character and is consequently not admissible where there is no evidence of wrongdoing on the part of the defendant. 32

§ 526 ----Generally [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

The trial court did not err in a first degree-murder prosecution by admitting evidence that defendant had burned the victim's body a day after killing her. Premeditation and deliberation generally must be established by circumstantial evidence, because both are processes of the mind not ordinarily susceptible to proof by direct evidence; □ defendant's handling of the body from the time of the killing until the body was finally burned and buried is evidence from which a jury could infer premeditation and deliberation. State v Rose (1994) 335 NC 301, 439 SE2d 518.

The trial court did not err in a caveat proceeding by excluding evidence regarding the behavior of the primary beneficiary after the execution of the will. In re Will of Jones (1994) 114 NC App 782, 443 SE2d 363.

It is well established that evidence of one's transfers of property after the happening of an accident, or the occurrence of some other event which may render him liable in damages, is admissible to show a consciousness of liability and a purpose to evade satisfaction of it. 33 Where such evidence is admitted, evidence is also admissible on behalf of the defendant to explain the reason for the disposition of his property. 34

§ 528 Interference with fair trial; suppression or fabrication of evidence

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Evidence of conduct of a party to an action having for its motive or purpose prevention of a fair trial, by intimidation or corruption of a witness ³⁵ or otherwise, is admissible against the party on the ground of its tendency to prove the falsity or fraudulent nature of a claim or defense. ³⁶

Similarly, evidence of the misconduct of a party who has destroyed or withheld evidence which he or she ought to produce is admissible as tending to show that the party is unwilling to rely on the truth of his or her cause. ³⁷ For example, in an action for damages for personal injuries, it has been held proper, after the close of defendant's case, for the plaintiff, in rebuttal on the question of damages, to solicit the testimony from defendant's attorney as a witness that, upon demand of the defendant, the plaintiff submitted to an examination by a doctor designated by the defendant, the purpose of plaintiff's attorney being to permit comments by him to the jury with respect to the failure of the defendant to call the doctor as a witness. ³⁸

A presumption or inference arises from such proof that the evidence, if produced, would be unfavorable to the party seeking to suppress it. ³⁹

§ 529 --Attempt to bribe, intimidate, or influence witness

View Entire Section Go to Parallel Reference Table

Evidence tending to prove that a party to a civil action, or an agent of the party, has attempted to bribe, intimidate, or otherwise influence a witness so that the witness either does not testify or testifies falsely, is admissible as an admission of the weakness of the party's case or of the false or fraudulent nature of his or her claim. ⁴⁰ This rule does not apply, of course, where the attempt to influence the witness is made by one not a party to the action or who is not shown to be an agent of a party, unless there is some testimony sufficient to connect the defendant with the attempt. ⁴¹

Evidence of an attempt to influence a witness is not admissible where the influence is exerted in an attempt merely to induce one to testify. ⁴²

b. Criminal Prosecutions [530-543]

§ 530 Generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

As a general proposition, in a criminal prosecution evidence of the conduct of the accused subsequent to the time of the offense with which he or she is charged may, if it has any probative significance in such respect, go to the jury as a means of establishing the fact of the accused's innocence or guilt. 43 In this respect, what one does or says immediately after being charged with having committed a criminal offense is admissible for the purpose of showing innocence or guilt. 44 Evidence is admissible of the emotional conduct of the accused after the commission of the offense, 45 such as the fact that the accused was confused or embarrassed, 46 or was stolid or indifferent, 47 or remained silent as to his or her age, name, and address when arrested. 48

When a person accused of a crime endeavors in any manner to escape or evade threatened prosecution by flight or concealment, 49 resistance to lawful arrest, 50 the destruction or concealment of stolen property or property the possession of which is illegal, 51 or other ex post facto indication of a desire to evade prosecution, 52 such fact may be shown in evidence as one of a series of circumstances from which guilt may be inferred.

In weighing such evidence, ordinary caution is required, yet such inferences are to be drawn from it as experience indicates are warranted. 53 Whether the conduct of an accused was contrary to the ordinary behavior of a person charged with crime or was attributable to his or her mental characteristics and natural disposition is peculiarly a question for the jury to determine. 54

When the question is whether a defendant's conduct evidenced a peculiar plan to commit particular offense, there is no reason to exclude conduct occurring subsequently. People v Coleman (1994) 158 Ill 2d 319, 198 Ill Dec 813, 633 NE2d 654, reh den (Apr 4, 1994) and cert den (US) 130 L Ed 2d 143, 115 S Ct 215.

There was no error in a first- degree murder prosecution in the introduction of testimony that the witness had never seen defendant drive the victim's car prior to the day he was arrested, had not known the victim to loan his car to anyone, and had never known defendant to own a watch where the defendant was driving the victim's car and had the victim's watch in his pocket when he was questioned. □ □ Testimony concerning defendant's sudden and unprecedented possession of the victim's personal property immediately after the victim's murder is relevant to the issue of whether defendant was involved in the killing; however, assuming error under the balancing test of GS § 8C-1, Rule 403, defendant did not show a reasonable possibility that a different result would have been reached at trial had the error not occurred. State v Ysut Mlo (1994) 335 NC 353, 440 SE2d 98.

Evidence that defendant was armed with a shotgun at the time of his arrest and that he was hesitant to submit to arrest for a murder committed less than a week before was relevant to show defendant's knowledge of his own guilt. State v Mason (1994) 337 NC 165, 446 SE2d 58.

The trial court did not err in a first- degree murder prosecution by admitting testimony concerning defendant's actions prior to and after the murder where the testimony tends to implicate defendant in the theft of quarters missing from the victim's bedroom and therefore in the murder, and tends to show that defendant had the opportunity to carry out his threats to kill the victim on the night of the murder. Although defendant argued that the probative value of the testimony was substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice, the defendant did not demonstrate any abuse of discretion. State v Alston (1995) 341 NC 198, 461 SE2d 687.

§ 532 Flight or concealment before arrest, generally

Flight, concealment, or analogous conduct, when unexplained, is admissible as indicating consciousness of guilt, 58 for it is not to be supposed that one who is innocent and conscious of that fact would flee. 59

◆ Definition: The term "flight" has been applied in reference to actions of the defendant whereby he or she: fled the scene of the crime; left the jurisdiction; ran from the police or resisted arrest; or attempted to escape from custody. 60

The time lapse between the date of the commission of an offense and flight does not affect the admissibility of the evidence of flight. 61 Thus, the fact that a defendant did not flee for several days after the commission of the crime, and the fact that the defendant had not been taken into custody or formally arrested before a hasty departure affected the weight and not the admissibility of the evidence. 62 Furthermore, the fact that the defendant fled the courtroom when the case first came on for trial some six months after defendant's arrest does not affect the admissibility of evidence of the defendant's flight, since such remoteness in time goes only to the weight and not to the admissibility of such evidence. 63

Because flight alone is not necessarily more consistent with guilt than innocence, 64 evidence of flight must be accompanied by facts pointing to the motive which prompted it. 65 As bearing upon the motive of the accused in fleeing, it is competent for the prosecution to show that the defendant had knowledge of facts from which it might readily be inferred that an investigation would be made and evidence discovered tending to establish the defendant's guilt, 66 and it may show a warning by another person to the defendant to flee immediately following crime. 67

§ 532 ----Flight or concealment before arrest, generally [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Evidence of defendant's prearrest flight and subpoena for his business records was properly admitted to establish context for defendant's prearrest communications with federal authorities; it was admissible as evidence of consciousness of guilt also given close proximity between subpoena and flight and communications with authorities during flight to explain his version of events. United States v Melson (1993, CA8 Ark) 7 F3d 750.

There was no plain error in a first-degree murder prosecution in the trial court's instruction on flight where, except for that portion of the instruction informing the jury that "an escape from custody constitutes evidence of flight," the instruction is identical to the appropriate pattern jury instruction and that additional portion is a correct statement of the law. Flight is not an element of any of the offenses with which defendant was charged and the instruction thus could not have relieved the State of its burden of proving every element of the offenses. State v McDougald (1994) 336 NC 451, 444 SE2d 211.

The evidence was sufficient to warrant an instruction on flight in a first-degree murder prosecution where defendant ran from the scene after a neighbor fired his gun, threw down the identifying Redskins jacket he was wearing and disappeared among the bushes, a bloodhound was unsuccessful in tracking him, and he telephoned the police department hours later to turn himself in. State v Fisher (1994) 336 NC 684, 445 SE2d 866.

There was sufficient evidence in a prosecution in which defendant was convicted of first-degree murder, first-degree rape, and first-degree sexual offense to instruct the jury on flight where defendant did not object or allege plain error, but the merits of the issue were considered under a plain error analysis and the jury could reasonably infer flight from the evidence that defendant left the victim's naked body in a dark, secluded rural area; removed her clothing and jewelry to delay identification; left the scene; and was not apprehended until more than three months later, efforts which indicate an attempt by defendant to evade detection and capture. State v Moseley (1994) 338 NC 1, 449 SE2d 412.

The trial court did not err in a noncapital first-degree murder prosecution by instructing the jury on flight as evidence of guilt where there was evidence that defendant immediately sped away in his truck after shooting the victim five times and, although aware that police officers had visited his house in search of him, did not contact the police or return home for two weeks following the shooting. The court appropriately instructed the jury that it was to determine the weight to be given the evidence and that it was the contention of the State rather than the court that defendant had fled. Defendant did not request that another explanation for defendant's unavailability be suggested in the court's instructions. State v Watson (1994) 338 NC 168, 449 SE2d 694, reconsideration den, stay den 338 NC 523.

The evidence in a prosecution for first-degree murder, conspiracy to commit murder, and burglary supports a finding by the jury that defendant was in flight, and the pattern jury instruction on flight was a correct statement of law, where the jury received testimony that defendant told everyone to pack up and go to a motel as soon as he heard that the victim had been murdered; defendant decided that he and another man were going to leave town; and defendant ordered the other man to drive them to the bus station, where they boarded a bus for New York. Although defendant contends that there was evidence to rebut the State's inference of flight, it was for the jury to decide whether all of the facts and circumstances supported the State's contention that defendant had fled and the trial court appropriately told the jury that evidence of flight "may" be considered. State v Wilson (1994) 338 NC 244, 449 SE2d 391, writ den, stay den (NC) 1995 NC LEXIS 11.

The evidence in a first-degree murder trial was sufficient to support the trial court's instruction on flight as evidence of guilt where it showed that defendant left the scene of the murder and drove to his home in Virginia; after defendant became aware of injuries to the victim from being dragged behind defendant's logging truck, defendant drove the victim to a deserted area and dropped the victim into a creek fifteen to eighteen feet off the road and at the bottom of a twenty- foot drop; and after defendant got home, his truck was cleaned up and painted so that there was no evidence of blood on the truck. State v House (1995) 340 NC 187, 456 SE2d 292.

Evidence tending to show flight of an accused is admissible, regardless of the strength or conclusiveness of such evidence, and where the defendant in a prosecution for the sale of marijuana admitted that he had fled from the authorities on several occasions, including the day of his arrest, such evidence was admissible despite the defendant's contention that it was too remote in time from the indictment. Law v State (Ala App) 342 So 2d 412, cert den (Ala) 342 So 2d 413 and cert den 434 US 919, 54 L Ed 2d 276, 98 S Ct 392.

§ 533 --Facts showing flight

Testimony by the police that they made a search for the defendant is competent evidence to show flight. 68 Thus, an officer's testimony that he obtained a warrant for defendant's arrest on the date of the crime, and had been attempting service but could not locate the defendant for five days is competent to show flight by the defendant. 69

Evidence indicating that the defendant walked calmly, rather than ran, from the scene of a shooting, is sufficient to indicate flight by the defendant, 70 although proof that the defendant left the scene of the crime is not proof of flight absent additional evidence to show that the accused secreted himself or left the county or jurisdiction immediately after the commission of the crime. 71 The fact that notices of reward for capture of the accused were sent to various parts of the country is admissible, 72 but the introduction in evidence of a document offering a reward for the return of designated property and containing a description of the defendant is not admissible in proof of flight. 73

Evidence that the accused, having left the prosecuting jurisdiction, knew of and opposed an attempt at extradition, without more, does not suffice to show flight. 74

§ 534 --Explanation of flight or concealment; voluntary surrender

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

When the prosecution introduces evidence against the defendant in a criminal case tending to show that after the commission of the crime charged, the defendant concealed himself or fled from the vicinity, the defendant is entitled to the benefit of any explanation which he may offer as to why he fled or concealed himself. 75

Insanity or drunkenness, 76 fear of violence, 77 demands of business or other duties, 78 or social invitations, 79 are some of the circumstances that the accused may offer in explanation or mitigation of the fact of flight. That the explanation for the defendant's flight is fantastic does not affect its admissibility; rather, the reasonableness of the defendant's explanation is for the jury in determining the weight to be attached to the circumstances of his flight. 80

It has been held that, after evidence of the defendant's flight has been introduced by the prosecution, it is error to exclude evidence of his voluntary surrender. 81 However, there is other authority to the effect that the fact that the defendant surrenders voluntarily after he has fled is immaterial, on the ground that such surrender often takes place after flight and concealment. 82 In any event, it has been held that while evidence of voluntary surrender tends to weaken the effect of the evidence of flight, it does not affect its relevancy and it need not be withdrawn from the consideration of the jury. 83

§ 535 --As evidence of guilt of another person, or of another crime

View Entire Section

In the event that several are arrested for the same crime, the flight of one is not ordinarily evidence against another 84 because flight is merely a circumstance tending to establish a consciousness of guilt in the person fleeing. 85

While flight because of one crime is generally not admissible as evidence of guilt of another crime, 86 such evidence has been admitted where it bears relevance to the defendant's guilt concerning the offenses charged in the current prosecution. 87

In a prosecution for first-degree murders arising out of convenience store robbery-murders, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting sheriff's deputies' testimony regarding a car chase that culminated in defendant's arrest, even though the chase took place after police attempted to arrest defendant for collateral crimes of robbery and attempted kidnapping that occurred after defendant's involvement in the charged murders, where the circumstances surrounding defendant's arrest were crucial to link defendant to the murder weapon. O'Connell v State (Fla) 480 So 2d 1284, 10 FLW 620.

§ 536 Attempted suicide

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

The fact that one charged with a crime attempts to commit suicide soon after the offense occurs, 88 or in order to escape prosecution for committing such crime, 89 is admissible in evidence. The principle upon which evidence of flight of one accused of a crime is admitted 90 is applicable to evidence that the accused, when in custody, charged with crime, attempted to take his own life and thereby escape further prosecution. 91 However, evidence of a suicide attempt which takes place after the defendant has already pled guilty and is awaiting sentencing is not admissible, since such an attempt is not probative of flight from a pending prosecution. 92

Attempted suicide, as does flight, tends to show a consciousness of guilt. 93 Thus, in prosecution for kidnapping and sexual abuse, evidence of defendant's alleged suicide attempt while in squad car en route to jail was admissible to show defendant's consciousness of guilt. 94

§ 537 Escape or attempted escape from jail or custody

Evidence that a person charged with crime escaped and fled from jail or the custody of an officer, 95 or attempted such an escape, 96 or fled after he had been admitted to bail, 97 is admissible against him as a circumstance tending in some degree to disclose his consciousness of guilt. The general objection to the admissibility of such evidence of escape or attempt to escape is that it tends to charge the accused with the commission of a different offense, one that would have no tendency to establish motive, criminal intent, or a uniform course of action, as to the offense for which he is being tried, but such objection has been uniformly overruled. 98 Evidence of escape or attempted escape from custody or jail is a form of circumstantial evidence, and that it is equivocal or consistent with suppositions other than guilt does not render it inadmissible. 99 Evidence of flight as indicative of a consciousness of guilt is a classic example of the admissibility of equivocal circumstantial evidence. 1

An FBI "wanted" circular published and circulated following the issuance of federal warrant for "unlawful flight" after the defendant's escape from jail while awaiting trial is properly admissible into evidence as tending to show the fact of the defendant's flight from custody. 2

§ 538 --Where person is detained for two or more crimes

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

It is the rule in some states that when an accused is in custody or jail under two or more separate and distinct charges and he escapes or attempts to escape, evidence of the escape, which ordinarily tends to show consciousness of guilt, 3 is inadmissible upon the trial of any one of the two or more charges. 4 The reason usually given for the exclusionary rule is that it is impossible to determine which charge motivated the accused to escape or attempt to escape, and that he may have been motivated by consciousness that he was guilty of the offense for which he is not on trial. 5 However, where it is clear from the evidence that the accused escaped from or attempted to escape from custody or jail because of the specific charge for which he is on trial, there is no reason or occasion for the application of this exclusionary rule. 6

It is the rule in other states that when an accused is in custody or jail under two or more separate and distinct charges and he escapes or attempts to escape, evidence of the escape is admissible upon the trial of any one of the two or more charges. 7 Whether an escape shows consciousness of guilt of the offense on trial, when the accused is also charged with other offenses, is a question of fact for the jury, going to the weight of the evidence rather than to its admissibility. 8 The fact that the evidence of the escape or attempted escape has limited probative force under such circumstances has been held not to require its exclusion, it being reasoned that evidence of escape or attempted escape from custody or jail is equivocal and consistent with suppositions other than guilt even where the accused is charged with only one crime. 9 Such evidence has been held admissible even though it places the accused, on trial for one crime, in the position of either disclosing to the jury the other crime with which he is charged but not then on trial, or remaining silent while the jury weighs the fact of escape or attempted escape unenlightened by knowledge of the dual reason for his detention. 10

§ 539 Refusal to flee or escape; voluntary surrender

View Entire Section

The general rule is that the defendant in a criminal case is not, for the purpose of showing his innocence, allowed to prove that he refused to take to flight before his arrest or to escape from jail after his arrest, even though offered the opportunity to do so, 11 at least in the absence of any testimony that he had attempted to flee or escape. 12 Thus, the trial court in an armed robbery prosecution properly refused to allow the defendant to show that he was not arrested for several days after he was questioned by an officer and that during that time he did not attempt to flee. 13

§ 539 ----Refusal to flee or escape; voluntary surrender [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

The trial court did not err in failing to instruct the jury that evidence of defendant's nonflight from the scene may be considered in determining whether the combined circumstances indicate innocence or a showing of nonguilt. State v Burr (1995) 341 NC 263, 461 SE2d 602.

It is a well-established principle of criminal law that evidence of guilt found upon a person under legal arrest for a crime is admissible against the defendant. 14 Whatever is found upon his person or in his possession which was a part of the means by which he accomplished the crime, whether an instrument, device, or token, is legitimate evidence for the prosecution and may be taken from him and used for that purpose. 15

§ 541 Possession of fruits of crime

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Evidence of the fact that a defendant was found to be in possession of the fruits of a crime recently after its commission is admissible, and, though only prima facie evidence of guilt, may be of controlling weight unless explained by the circumstances or accounted for in some way consistent with innocence. 16

◆ Observation: The accused's explanation regarding possession of property supposed to have been recently stolen is admissible as original evidence on behalf of the defendant if made at the time his or her possession was first directly or circumstantially challenged, or when the accused was charged with the theft. 17

In those instances where evidence of possession by the defendant of property other than that involved in the crime with which he is charged has no proper tendency to connect him with the crime charged, its only effect being to discredit the defendant by showing or tending to show that the defendant had been guilty of other crimes, such evidence is inadmissible. 18 On the other hand, evidence of the possession of other property by the defendant may be admissible because it is found in such close connection with the property involved in the crime charged that evidence regarding it is inseparable from evidence of possession of the property charged in the indictment, or because the fact appears incidentally and naturally in showing the whole transaction concerning the property involved in the prosecution. 19 Evidence of the possession of other property than that involved in the prosecution is frequently admitted for the purpose of showing the intent of the defendant in doing the particular act charged against him as a crime, 20 or to prove scienter, or guilty or criminal knowledge with respect to the crime charged, 21 or as tending to show that such crime was a part of a system of criminal acts. 22

§ 541 ----Possession of fruits of crime [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

The trial court did not err in a first- degree murder prosecution by admitting testimony concerning defendant's actions prior to and after the murder where the testimony tends to implicate defendant in the theft of quarters missing from the victim's bedroom and therefore in the murder, and tends to show that defendant had the opportunity to carry out his threats to kill the victim on the night of the murder. Although defendant argued that the probative value of the testimony was substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice, the defendant did not demonstrate any abuse of discretion. State v Alston (1995) 341 NC 198, 461 SE2d 687.

§ 542 Change in financial condition

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Where the crime for which the defendant is being prosecuted is of such nature that the acquisition of money may be regarded as a natural result of its perpetration, evidence of the sudden acquisition of money by the defendant or of a significant improvement in his financial condition is admissible, even though the source of the money is not definitely traced or identified by the prosecution. 23 Although some cases insist, in order for evidence of money found in the accused's possession to be admissible, that the prior impecunious condition of the accused first be established, 24 other cases regard the evidence as admissible and treat the absence of a showing of the accused's prior impecunious condition as going merely to the weight of the evidence. 25

Evidence that an accomplice of the defendant suddenly acquired money or significantly improved his financial condition is also admissible, even though the source of the money is not definitely traced or identified by the prosecution. 26

The probative value of evidence that the defendant was in possession of money is enhanced where a relatively brief period of time has elapsed between the commission of the crime and the apprehension of the defendant. 27 In contrast, where the interval is substantial, the evidence that the defendant was in possession of money may even be rendered inadmissible, particularly where his prior impecunious condition has not been shown. 28

Evidence that the defendant was in possession of money has been held admissible where the crime for which the defendant was being prosecuted constituted burglary, 29 possession of heroin, 30 unlawful homicide, 31 larceny, 32 embezzlement, 33 robbery, 34 extortion, 35 or a liquor violation. 36

§ 543 Interference with fair trial; attempt to bribe or influence witness

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

An attempt by an accused in a criminal prosecution to induce a witness to testify falsely, 37 or not to testify against the accused, 38 or to stay away from the trial, 39 may be introduced in evidence against the defendant. The theory upon which evidence of this character is admitted is the strong improbability of similar action by an innocent person. 40

An attempt by a third person to influence a witness not to testify or to testify falsely is relevant and admissible in a criminal prosecution on the issue of the defendant's guilt where it is established that the attempt was made with the authorization of the accused. 41 Thus, in a case in which the defendant's friends and relatives have tried to intimidate a prosecution witness, and there is no evidence tending to connect the defendant with these activities, evidence of the threats and intimidation is not admissible against the defendant. 42

◆ Observation: An exception to the general rule that evidence of threats by third persons is only admissible where the threats can be linked to the defendant exists where the evidence of threats is offered not to prove the guilt of the accused, but rather to explain a witness' prior inconsistent statement. Evidence of threats to a witness or fear on the part of a witness, offered to explain an inconsistency, is admissible in criminal cases for credibility or rehabilitation purposes even if the threats or fear have not been linked to the defendant. 43

§ 543 ----Interference with fair trial; attempt to bribe or influence witness

Case authorities:

A defendant's attempt to eliminate a state witness is relevant and admissible. Heath v State (1994, Fla) 648 So 2d 660, 19 FLW S 540, petition for certiorari filed (Apr 24, 1995).

Evidence that a suspected person in any manner endeavors to evade a threatened prosecution by any ex post facto indication of a desire to evade prosecution is admissible against the accused, where the relevance of such evidence is based on consciousness of guilt inferred from such actions. Heath v State (1994, Fla) 648 So 2d 660, 19 FLW S 540, petition for certiorari filed (Apr 24, 1995).

Testimony that defendant and his friends threatened the State's principal witness and warned him not to testify and that defendant on one occasion shot the witness in the thigh was relevant to show defendant's awareness of his guilt, and the trial court did not err by finding that the probative value of this testimony was not substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. 12. Willingness or Refusal to Submit to or Allow Examination or Test [544-546]

§ 544 Physical examination of person

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

It is generally held that evidence is admissible in a civil action to show that a party to the action refused to permit a physical examination of his person. 44

In criminal prosecutions the question of the admissibility of evidence of the refusal of the accused to submit to an examination of his person depends to a large extent upon whether this would violate the rule against compelling the accused to give testimony which would tend to incriminate himself. 45

Evidence that the accused in a criminal case refused to submit to a scientific test to determine the amount of alcohol in his system, where such question is otherwise relevant, is of sufficient probative value to be admissible, because it indicates the accused's consciousness of guilt. 46 In some states, the legislature has enacted statutes which deal specifically with the admissibility of evidence that the accused in a criminal case refused to submit to a blood alcohol test which statutes are, of course, controlling. 47

Case authorities:

In DUI prosecution, trial court improperly suppressed evidence of defendant's refusal to submit to breath test. Defendant had no constitutional right to attorney at that time since tests for intoxication provide real, not communicative, evidence. Creation of (or refusal to create) real evidence does not rise to level of custodial interrogation since it does not require accused to communicate any personal beliefs or knowledge of facts. State v Leroy (1990) 15 Kan App 2d 68, 803 P2d 577.

In DUI prosecution, trial court erred in admitting evidence of defendant's refusal to take breathalyzer test where, although statute expressly stated that fact of refusal was admissible, statute also provided that no inference or presumption concerning guilt or innocence arose due to failure to submit to test; defendant successfully argued that evidence of refusal was admissible only if it was relevant to issue other than guilt or innocence (such as police officer's failure to follow proper procedure). Krauss v State (1991) 322 Md 376, 587 A2d 1102.

Trial court erred in suppressing evidence that defendant in DUI prosecution refused to submit to chemical testing even though defendant had not been warned that refusal would result in license suspension; statutory language indicated that legislature did not intend that introduction of evidence of refusal be conditioned on sufficient warning having been given. Commonwealth v Ruttle (1989) 388 Pa Super 262, 565 A2d 477.

In DUI prosecution, trial court erred in suppressing evidence of defendant's refusal to take breathalyzer test; revocation of implied consent to test was constitutionally admissible as prosecutorial evidence, and state did not have to lay foundation for such evidence by showing that, at the time, test machine was in proper working order and technician was properly qualified. State v Jansen (1991) 305 SC 320, 408 SE2d 235.

In DUI prosecution, trial court properly suppressed evidence of defendant's refusal to submit to alcohol test (by failing to provide two adequate breath samples, as required) where defendant had not first been properly advised of his rights, the "informing the accused" form that was used having been deficient. State v Grade (1991, App) 165 Wis 2d 143, 477 NW2d 315.

In DUI prosecution, trial court properly suppressed evidence of defendant's refusal to submit to alcohol test (by failing to provide two adequate breath samples, as required) where defendant had not first been properly advised of his rights, the "informing the accused" form that was used having been deficient in that it failed to advise of consequences of submitting to test. State v Algaier (1991, App) 165 Wis 2d 515, 478 NW2d 292.

§ 546 Lie detector test

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

It is generally held in criminal prosecutions that evidence is not admissible that the accused was willing or unwilling to take a lie detector test. 48 The contention that evidence of the accused's refusal to take a lie detector test tends to establish consciousness of guilt, 49 and that evidence of the accused's willingness to take such a test shows consciousness of innocence, 50 has been rejected. Since a guilty suspect would have nothing to lose by expressing a willingness to take a lie detector test, it being the general rule that the results could not be used as evidence against him, evidence of an accused's willingness or unwillingness to take such a test has little probative value, and thus is not properly admissible. 51

On the other hand, notwithstanding the general rule that it is improper to question an accused as to whether he took or refused to take a lie detector test, the state is entitled to show that the accused was offered a lie detector test but declined to take it if the accused has previously voluntarily testified that he was willing to take such a test. 52

Furthermore, testimony regarding a defendant's initial willingness to take a polygraph test prior to his statement that the test would not be necessary because of his desire to confess to the crime is admissible as evidence of circumstances leading up to the confession and does not violate the prohibition against introduction of evidence of a criminal defendant's unwillingness to take a polygraph test. 53

◆ Observation: It may be noted that the admission of such testimony has been ruled harmless error where the trial court properly admonished jury to disregard the testimony. 54

But see Wilson v Donegal Mut. Ins. Co., 410 Pa Super 31, 598 A2d 1310, holding that statement of defendant, on cross-examination, that his attorney had advised him to not take any sort of polygraph test because such tests were inadmissible and inaccurate, while not wholly without relationship to prior statement of defendant so as to be admissible for impeachment purposes had, at best, a very tenuous and indirect relationship to the prior statement, so that lower court went beyond the bounds of its discretion in permitting inquiry by prosecutor into an essentially non-relevant area, but that the elicitation of such testimony did not require a new trial where the reference to the polygraph was so ineffectual and inconsequential that it could in no way have obstructed the jury from a fair determination of the issues in the case based on relevant factors.

a. In General [547, 548]

§ 547 Generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Generally, evidence of conduct of a person on another occasion or occasions is considered to be irrelevant on the question of his or her conduct on the occasion in issue. 55 Evidence of other specific, though similar, acts may not be proved simply to show that, having done the same thing before, the person is likely to have done it on the occasion in issue, 56 unless the acts are connected in some special way, indicating a relevancy beyond mere similarity as to some particulars. 57 In criminal cases, the rule, subject to various exceptions, is that proof that the accused has committed another and separate offense is not admissible for the purpose of proving that he is guilty of the offense with which he stands charged. 58

There are, however, limitations upon the general rule excluding evidence of similar or comparable facts, acts, and conduct. Certain exceptions to this rule have been recognized where the evidence offered has some relevancy to the issues presented other than mere similarity. Although not subject to precise categorization, evidence of other similar acts will be admitted if it tends to establish: (1) motive; (2) intent; (3) the absence of mistake or accident; (4) a common scheme or plan; or (5) identity. 59

Generally, an issue as to the existence or occurrence of a particular fact, condition, or event, may be proved by evidence as to the existence or occurrence of similar facts, conditions, or events, under the same or substantially similar circumstances. 60 Evidence of similar occurrences or conditions may be admitted upon a showing of substantial identity of circumstances and reasonable proximity in time. 61 Such evidence is also admissible where the direct issue at hand is not the identity of circumstances. For instance, in a negligence action in which the control and ownership of certain property is at issue, evidence of similar circumstances or conditions is admissible to establish this. 62

In prosecution for assault and robbery and other crimes, trial court's error, if any, in refusing to admit evidence that some other victim had been assaulted in about same place about hour earlier was harmless where, at best, proffered evidence demonstrated only that person other than defendant engaged in similar attack; there was not even mere conjecture that assault on present victim was committed by that other individual. State v Bull (1993, App Div) 268 NJ Super 504, 634 A2d 101, certif den 135 NJ 304, 639 A2d 303.

b. Prior Accidents or Injuries at Same Location [549-552]

§ 549 Generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Evidence of other similar accidents at the same location can be circumstantially relevant in a negligence action to show the existence of a defective or dangerous condition, notice thereof, or causation on the occasion in question. 63 Thus, in actions involving the allegedly defective condition of a place, the admission of such evidence is within the trial court's discretion, to be exercised in light of all the surrounding circumstances indicating the relevance of the evidence with due regard for any possible prejudice to the defendant. 64 Factors contributing to a determination of whether evidence of a prior accident is admissible include:

- (1) the similarity of the circumstances surrounding prior accidents and the accident in the case at bar; 65
- (2) the amount of time elapsing between prior accidents and the accident in the case at trial; 66
- (3) defendant's opportunity to prepare for the introduction of prior accident evidence; 67 and
- (4) the possibility of introducing collateral issues and confusing the issues in the case at trial. 68

The admission of evidence of prior accidents or injuries is an exception to the general rule which ordinarily excludes evidence of independent events and occurrences not directly connected with the matter in dispute. 69

Subject to the general requirements of similarity of conditions, reasonable proximity in time, and avoidance of confusion of issues, 70 the courts have generally recognized that evidence of prior similar accidents at the same place as that of the accident in suit, or evidence of prior similar injuries resulting from the same appliance as the injury in suit, is admissible for the purpose of showing the existence of dangerous or defective premises or appliances. 71

§ 552 As showing negligence or cause of injury

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Although the courts recognize that evidence of prior similar accidents is admissible to show the existence or knowledge of a defect or danger, 74 they have frequently stated or held, usually in connection with the exclusion of the evidence where the negligence charged did not concern the defective character of the defendant's property, that evidence of prior accidents is not admissible on the basic issue of the defendant's negligence. 75

Evidence of prior accidents at the same place has sometimes been recognized as admissible as tending to demonstrate that plaintiff's injury was caused by the same condition which operated to cause the prior accident. 76

c. Absence of Other Accidents or Injuries [553-555]

§ 553 Generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Evidence of the absence of other accidents at the same place, or evidence of the absence of other injuries resulting from the use or operation of the same appliance, is relevant where the plaintiff contends that he or she has been harmed on, near, or by the defendant's property because of a defective condition which has been in existence over a considerable period of time. 77 Evidence of the absence of previous accidents at the same place where the plaintiff was injured, or of the absence of prior injuries arising from the use or operation of the appliance whereby the plaintiff was injured, has generally been held admissible as tending to show that the place or appliance was not dangerous 78 and that the defendant did not have actual or constructive knowledge of a dangerous condition, 79 although at least one jurisdiction has flatly refused to admit such evidence, on the basis that it introduces collateral issues which distract the attention of the jurors from the central issues at hand and greatly protracts the trial. 80

The question whether evidence of the absence of other accidents or injuries is of sufficient value to outweigh the possible inconvenience of investigating the collateral matters involved is largely a matter of trial administration, as to which the trial court should be allowed a large measure of discretion. 81 Thus, proffered evidence of the absence of prior accidents, though relevant, is properly excluded where it is unnecessary for resolution of any disputed issue in the case. 82

◆ Caution: Such evidence is not admissible where it will lead to confusion of the issues before the jury. 83

§ 554 Necessity of showing similarity of conditions

Go to Parallel Reference Table

In order for evidence of the absence of other accidents or injuries to be admissible, it must be shown that during the period involved the conditions at the place in question were substantially similar to those prevailing at the time of the accident in suit. 84 It must also be shown that the use of the premises or appliance on the prior occasions was substantially identical with the reasonably anticipated use by the plaintiff. 85 The determination of just what degree of substantiality satisfies the requirements of the rule depends to a large degree upon the factual situation presented in the particular case, and it appears that the matter is frequently left to the discretion of the trial court. 86

§ 555 Absence of other accidents when following custom or practice

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

The courts are not in agreement on the question whether, in an action where it is charged that a custom or practice followed by the opposing party constituted negligence, this charge may be met by evidence showing that when the custom or practice was followed at other times or places no similar accident resulted. While there are a number of cases which appear to exclude such evidence on the ground that it is irrelevant and without probative force,⁸⁷ evidence of the absence of other similar accidents from the custom or practice which was alleged to be negligent has been admitted in a number of cases on the theory that such evidence has some tendency to show that the custom or practice in question is not in fact attended with such dangers as to render its employment negligence.⁸⁸ Such evidence has sometimes been admitted on the issue whether the person alleged to have been negligent is chargeable with notice of the dangers involved in the practice.⁸⁹

Although total identity of conditions at the time of the accident in suit and at the other times involved in the proffered evidence can never be established, evidence of the absence of other accidents should not be admitted where the conditions are substantially dissimilar.⁹⁰

14. State of Mind; Knowledge, Belief, Intent, and Motive [556-558]

a. In General [556, 557]

§ 556 Generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

The state of mind of a person, like the state or condition of the body, is a fact to be proved like any other fact when it is relevant to an issue in a case. 91 The courts, of course, cannot ascertain thoughts that have had no outward manifestations, and the state of a person's mind, his or her knowledge, or belief, and intent must be inferred from the person's statements and actions. 92 Where it becomes material to show the mental operation of a person or to ascertain the reasons or influences which have induced certain action or conduct on his part, either they may be shown by accompanying circumstances, 93 or, it is generally held, the person may testify directly about them, even though such testimony may partake in some degree of the nature of a conclusion. 94

Whenever issues of duress, 95 undue influence, 96 fraud, 97 and good faith 98 are raised, the evidence must take a rather wide range and may embrace all the facts and circumstances which go to make up the transaction, disclose its true character, explain the acts of the parties, and throw light on their objects and intentions. 99

Where malice is an essential factor in a case, it is sometimes presumed from the doing of the act charged. 1

§ 556 ----Generally [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

The court did not err in a first- degree murder prosecution by admitting testimony from the victim's twelve- year-old son that his state of mind when the defendant entered the house on a prior occasion was "fear." Although the jury had probably concluded on its own that the witness was in fear when he fled the house, the testimony was relevant to prove matters other than the character of the defendant in that it was relevant to rebut defendant's contention that he was in the house with the consent of the victim, the testimony served to corroborate testimony indicating that defendant had threatened the victim, and it demonstrated the state of the familial relationship in the period immediately preceding the murder. State v Lynch (1994) 337 NC 415, 445 SE2d 581.

Evidence of a rifle telescope was relevant and admissible in a first-degree murder trial to show that defendant and a co-participant armed themselves to hit a distant target at night in low light and thus that defendant premeditated and deliberated the killing where the evidence at trial showed that the victim had been shot at night from a distance of more than three or four feet by bullets from a .22 caliber rifle and that the shots were fired in rapid succession; defendant told a deputy sheriff that he fired a .22 caliber rifle at the victim and supplied information as to where the rifle was located; a duffel bag containing, among other things, the .22 caliber rifle used in the shooting and the dismounted telescope was found at the co- participant's residence; "scrape marks" on the mounting bracket of the rifle corresponded to "scrape marks" on the telescope; defendant stated that he and the co- participant waited until night to commit the robbery-murder; and a killing done from a distance in low light is the type of situation that would call for a telescopically equipped weapon. State v Ward (1994) 338 NC 64, 449 SE2d 709.

Evidence that a murder victim's husband was incarcerated on felony drug charges on the night of the murder was not relevant to show that defendant did not have the specific intent to kill the victim and was properly excluded by the trial court in this first-degree murder trial since (1) this evidence had no logical tendency to show that there were drugs hidden in the victim's house and could not reasonably support an inference that defendant was at the victim's house to steal cocaine and did not plan to kill the only person who could lead him to the cocaine, and (2) such an inference was contradicted by defendant's own statement that a co-participant told him that he had a job to do, namely, to rob and perhaps kill the victim; that he waited, armed with a rifle, with the co-participant in a bush behind the victim's house; and that he started shooting when the victim got out of her truck. State v Ward (1994) 338 NC 64, 449 SE2d 709.

Statements made by defendant to an officer prior to his arrest on the current drug charges that he was just a businessman who should be left alone and that officers "should concentrate on those drug dealers who ripped people off and shoot people" were relevant on the issue of defendant's intent to sell and deliver drugs, and the trial court did not err by finding that the probative value of those statements outweighed any danger of unfair prejudice. State v Taylor (1995) 117 NC App 644, 453 SE2d 225.

When the knowledge which a person may have had is material to a judicial proceeding, this is a fact to be proved as any other fact, and a wide range of proof is admissible in this respect. 2 It may be evidenced by the affirmative statement or admission of the possessor of the knowledge. 3 Knowledge, like intent, is a state of mind and may be proved by circumstantial evidence, 4 since direct evidence on such facts is rarely available. 5

Proof that other injuries were received at the same place at which a particular injury occurred is admissible to show notice of a dangerous condition at such place. 6 And where a practice or custom has been followed for several years, prior to an accident for which action is brought, evidence of the practice or custom may be introduced for the purpose of showing constructive notice of such practice. 7 In criminal cases, proof of the commission of other crimes may be permitted for the purpose of showing the defendant's knowledge and intention. 8

Case authorities:

Evidence of a decedent's past drinking habits was admissible in an action arising from an automobile accident in which the decedent was the passenger, the driver and decedent had been drinking, and contributory negligence was an issue. Evidence of the deceased's drinking habits was relevant to his knowledge of the effects of alcohol. While plaintiff argued that the probative value was outweighed by the prejudicial effect of the evidence, there was other damaging testimony about the decedent's drinking habits to which plaintiff did not object. b. Intent or Motive [558]

§ 558 Generally

View Entire Section

Go to Supplement

Intent as a state of mind is a fact which may be proved when it is material. 9 Because it can rarely be established by direct evidence, intent must often be proved circumstantially and by inference. 10 Considerable latitude is given in the admission of evidence to show such intent or motive. 11 Intent may be proved by one's words 12 or conduct, 13 or by facts and circumstances which characterize the transaction. 14 On direct examination, a witness may testify as to his or her intention, motive, or other unexpressed mental state, provided that the testimony is material to the issues in the case. 15

§ 558 ----Generally [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Testimony by a social worker that defendant had received checks from government agencies for his son until two months before a murder committed during the robbery of a convenience store was not improper character evidence and was relevant under Rules 401 and 404(b) to show motive. GS § 8C-1, Rules 401 and 404(b). State v Powell (1995) 340 NC 674, 459 SE2d 219.

In light of testimony that immediately prior to stabbing a murder victim, defendant speculated that the victim had been "messaging around" with his wife, defendant's statements in a letter to his wife regarding his anger and desire to kill someone as a result of his wife cheating on him, written four days prior to the murder, were relevant to show a motive for defendant's killing of the victim, and the State was properly permitted to cross-examine defendant about this letter. State v Goode (1995) 341 NC 513, 461 SE2d 631.

In a prosecution arising from the murder of a police officer during his attempt to arrest the defendant in connection with an assault from which the defendant was fleeing, it was not error for the court to permit the prosecutor to introduce into evidence photographs of the defendant's hotel room which depicted graffiti stating "Fuck the Police" since the expression revealed the defendant's general malicious attitude towards police officers and was relevant to show that he had a fixed bias against police officers and that such bias could have contributed to his motive for and malice in the shooting of the officer. Commonwealth v Lacava (Pa) 666 A2d 221.

In action by borrowers against bank alleging fraud by bank in misrepresenting that it would extend them a $500,000 line of credit, evidence that bank was preparing SBA loan application for borrowers, along with bank officer's denial at trial that he had made an agreement with the borrowers for the line of credit, was insufficient evidence that bank never intended to perform agreement. T.O. Stanley Boot Co. v Bank of El Paso (1992, Tex) 847 SW2d 218, 19 UCCRS2d 514, reh'g of cause overr (Mar 24, 1993).

The testimony of a witness in a criminal prosecution for homicide, to the effect that defendant had stated that men should settle their differences "in blood," was relevant as probative on his motive, intent, or state of mind. Morejon v State (Fla App D3) 394 So 2d 1100.

In a criminal prosecution for two murders, testimony that one of the victims had told the sheriff two days before the murders that he and the defendant had engaged in a serious argument was relevant for the limited purpose of showing ill will between the victim and the defendant and as tending to show a resulting motive, intent, malice, premeditation, and deliberation on the part of defendant. State v Alston, 307 NC 321, 298 SE2d 631.

Evidence regarding the physical condition of a party, such as his strength, is admissible, if relevant to the issues in a case. 16 Of course, evidence relative to a physical condition is not admissible when such condition is not relevant to an issue in the case on trial. 17 Evidence regarding the physical condition of any party to a motor vehicle accident is admissible in an action to recover damages for injuries sustained. 18

§ 559 ----Generally [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

The trial court did not err in a first- degree murder prosecution by admitting testimony from the State's pathologist during the guilt phase concerning the pain and suffering caused by the wounds to the victims. Expert testimony concerning the pain and suffering of the victims in a first-degree murder case is relevant and admissible to assist the jury in ascertaining whether the defendant was acting with premeditation and deliberation. State v Vick (1995) 341 NC 569, 461 SE2d 655.

In a prosecution for murder, evidence of the victim's pregnancy was properly admitted since police used the presence of fetal remains in the pelvic area of the victim's skeleton to identify the victim. Commonwealth v Miller (1995, Pa) 664 A2d 1310, petition for certiorari filed (Nov 21, 1995).

16. Establishing Identity in Criminal Prosecutions [560-576]

a. In General [560-564]

§ 560 Generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Identification of the defendant as the guilty actor is essential. Any evidence which serves to establish the actor's identity is relevant ¹⁹ and, if competent, is admissible. This evidence may relate directly to the alleged actor, such as his or her physical characteristics; ²⁰ the result of efforts to trail the guilty person, such as bloodhound evidence; ²¹ or the results of scientific methods of criminal detection. ²²

A witness may testify as to the identity of a person on the basis of any fact which leads the witness to believe that he or she knows the identity of such person. ²³

Facts indicating identity may be introduced in evidence even though they tend to show the commission of another crime. ²⁴

§ 560 ----Generally [SUPPLEMENT]

Practice Aids: Admissibility in evidence of composite picture or sketch produced by police to identify offender. ²³ ALR5th 672.

Case authorities:

Admission of testimony that assault victim identified defendant in photographic array was admissible, even if array was somewhat suggestive in that defendant was only person wearing orange prison clothing and standing in front of police height chart, since victim's identification was reliable. Chism v State (1993) 312 Ark 559, 853 SW2d 255.

Child's identification of abuser to medical personnel during examination is not admissible as hearsay exception based on presumption of truthfulness of statements in pursuit of medical treatment, but is admissible under FS § 90.803(23), which establishes special procedure, including notice and hearing, for establishing admissibility of out-of-court statements made by children under 12 years old in child abuse cases; State's admission of evidence without compliance with notice and hearing requirements is permissible because child's statements were also admissible as prior consistent statements to rebut charges by defense counsel that child fabricated charges in response to improper influence by prosecutors. State v Jones (1993, Fla) 625 So 2d 821, 18 FLW S 456.

In a prosecution for armed assault with intent to rob a bank, a witness who was acquainted with the defendant was improperly permitted to testify that it was the defendant who was depicted in a videotape of another bank robbery since the jurors were capable of drawing their own conclusions regarding that issue. Commonwealth v Austin, 421 Mass 357, 657 NE2d 458.

The court did not err when it refused to allow the introduction of evidence that, 8 months after the crime at issue but before the trial began, defense counsel mistook another person for the defendant while at a jail and did not realize his error until he had spoken to that person for a while since there was no evidence that the other person had committed any strikingly similar crimes. Commonwealth v Rosa, 422 Mass 18, 661 NE2d 56.

A judge's excluding evidence of another person who looks like the defendant is not an abuse of his discretion when an uninvolved person mistakes the other person for the defendant and that alleged alternate perpetrator did not commit any strikingly similar crimes. Commonwealth v Rosa, 422 Mass 18, 661 NE2d 56.

The trial court did not err by denying defendant's motion to dismiss a first-degree murder prosecution for insufficient evidence placing him at the scene of the crime where the State's evidence at trial tended to show that defendant's automobile was parked at Vanessa Craddock's (the victim's) house minutes before the shootings; defendant was seen striking the victim immediately before shots were heard; several shots were heard and her son was heard crying; both the victim and her son were found dead from gunshot wounds; after the shots were heard, the blue automobile alleged to be defendant's sped from the victim's residence; and defendant told another woman that he had just come from "Van's" when he arrived at her residence minutes after the murders were committed. State v Vick (1995) 341 NC 569, 461 SE2d 655.

The trial court did not err by refusing to permit a witness to testify in a murder trial that an eyewitness's description of the assailant more accurately fit her son than her grandson, the defendant, where three eyewitnesses identified defendant as the man they saw shoot the victim; the witness was not present when the shooting occurred; and the excluded testimony did not directly point to the guilt of a third party. State v McCray (1995) 342 NC 123, 463 SE2d 176.

Although evidence of a prior altercation with an eyewitness is relevant as a general rule, that evidence loses its relevance when, as here, the identity of the person with whom defendant argued is merely speculation. State v Floyd (1994) 115 NC App 412, 445 SE2d 54.

Police officer's identification of defendant from photograph was not unduly suggestive, although officer was shown series of photographs consecutively rather than simultaneously, as second police officer, who was selecting photographs, did not suggest possible identification of defendant, and first officer had carefully observed defendant during drug transaction and knew "immediately" that defendant's photograph was that of perpetrator. State v Thompson (1995, La App 2d Cir) 665 So 2d 686.

Where the right to counsel has been denied in connection with a pretrial identification, such as a lineup, subsequent trial testimony of the witness regarding the pretrial identification of the defendant is inadmissible. 25 The witness may, however, identify the accused at trial as the perpetrator of the offense provided that the prosecution can establish by clear and convincing evidence that the in-court identification is based upon observations of the suspect rather than an improper pretrial identification. 26

◆ Observation: Congress has apparently attempted to nullify the application of Wade 27 in federal prosecutions by the passage of a statute providing that the testimony of a witness that he saw the accused commit or participate in the commission of the crime for which the accused is being tried shall be admissible in evidence in a criminal prosecution in any trial court ordained and established under Article III of the Constitution of the United States. 28 It has been noted in this regard that the fact that an eyewitness might on some occasion prior to trial have identified the accused, without a lawyer for the accused being present, cannot in reason, law, or common sense justify a rule of evidence which would serve to exclude a subsequent in-court eyewitness identification. 29

§ 561 ----Post-indictment extrajudicial identification; Sixth amendment implications [SUPPLEMENT]

◆ Caution: The United States Supreme Court, in United States v Ash, 413 US 300, 37 L Ed 2d 619, 93 S Ct 2568, has refused to extend the right to counsel principles announced in United States v Wade and Gilbert v California to a photographic lineup. In Ash, the Supreme Court held that there is no right to have counsel present when the police show photographs of the defendant and others to witnesses, and this is so even if the defendant has already been indicted. The Court reasoned there is no right to counsel at a photographic identification because unlike a lineup there is no "trial-like confrontation" involving the presence of the accused.

The right to counsel at a lineup is generally discussed in 21A Am Jur 2d, Criminal Law §§ 802 et seq.

§ 562 Cautionary instruction regarding reliability of identification testimony

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

A cautionary instruction to the jury as to the potential unreliability of eyewitness identification testimony is proper, if not mandatory, 30 where the circumstances suggest some level of doubt regarding the accuracy of the identification; 31 however, a failure to give the instruction may 32 or may not 33 be prejudicial.

The instruction has been considered unnecessary—

—where the jury is adequately instructed as to the credibility of witnesses, 34 the state's burden of proof, 35 or both. 36

—where the identification testimony is corroborated by other evidence. 37

—where the identification testimony is positive, certain, and consistent. 38

—where the issue of identification is adequately developed in the course of cross-examination or in the closing argument to the jury. 39

§ 563 Extrajudicial identification, generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Besides testimony of a witness identifying a defendant in court, evidence is sometimes given of the fact that the defendant was previously identified as being the perpetrator. The testimony of the person by whom the extrajudicial identification was made, as to the fact of such identification, has been held admissible in some cases, ⁴¹ but not in others. ⁴² A reason frequently assigned for the admission of evidence as to a prior identification of the accused is that it is ordinarily more reliable than an identification at the trial, its closer relation to the criminal act in point of time affording less opportunity for deterioration or fading of the identifier's impressions or recollection and for changes in the appearance of the accused or guilty party, thus enabling the identifier to be more certain as to the identification. 43

The testimony of the identifier as to the fact that at some earlier time he identified the defendant has generally been held admissible against the objection that it is hearsay, 44 for the reason, as stated in some cases, that such testimony relates to a matter within the knowledge of the witness. 45 The evidence has been excluded on the ground that it is not permissible for the witness to bolster his identification of the accused at the trial by stating that he had identified him on a prior occasion, 46 although this argument has been criticized as being without merit. 47

The testimony of the identifying witness as to the prior identification is not admissible as original or substantive evidence, 48 although there is some authority to the contrary. 49 It has been declared admissible in corroboration of the testimony of the same witness identifying the accused at the trial, 50 as well as in rebuttal of testimony tending to impeach or discredit the identifying witness. 51

§ 563 ----Extrajudicial identification, generally [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

A show-up identification is inherently suggestive if a witness is presented with only one suspect for identification, but a show-up is not invalid if it does not give rise to a substantial likelihood of irreparable misidentification given the totality of the circumstances. Perez v State (1995, Fla) 648 So 2d 715, 20 FLW S 25.

Defendant in narcotics case was entitled to Wade hearing with regard to undercover officer's identification where (1) 26 days had elapsed between officer's initial encounter with defendant and his identifications on day of defendant's arrest, (2) officer had misidentified location of first identification (which led to erroneous arrests of innocent parties at premises), and (3) identifications on day of arrest were suggestive given fact that they consisted of several street viewings (including one after defendant was arrested and handcuffed) and subsequent showup at station house. People v Mato (1994) 83 NY2d 406, 611 NYS2d 92, 633 NE2d 446.

Mere labelling of identification as "confirmatory" will not obviate need for Wade hearing since case-by- case analysis of facts and circumstances remains necessary. People v Mato (1994) 83 NY2d 406, 611 NYS2d 92, 633 NE2d 446.

The trial court did not err by refusing to permit a witness to testify in a murder trial that an eyewitness's description of the assailant more accurately fit her son than her grandson, the defendant, where three eyewitnesses identified defendant as the man they saw shoot the victim; the witness was not present when the shooting occurred; and the excluded testimony did not directly point to the guilt of a third party. State v McCray (1995) 342 NC 123, 463 SE2d 176.

§ 564 --Testimony concerning extrajudicial identification made by another

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

The testimony of a third person who has heard or observed an extrajudicial identification made by another, as to the fact of such identification having been made, has been held admissible. 52 The testimony of the third person has been declared admissible in corroboration of the testimony of the identifier at the trial, 53 as well as in rebuttal of testimony tending to impeach or discredit the identifying witness, 54 or in rebuttal of a charge or suggestion of falsity. 55

◆ Observation: Some of the thinking in support of admissibility is that testimony of the third person to the effect that he had seen the identifier observe the accused on the occasion of the identification relates to a matter within the knowledge of the witness, 56 or that the identifier is present and subject to cross-examination at the trial. 57

The testimony of a third person as to the extrajudicial identification has been declared inadmissible on the ground that it constitutes hearsay. 58

The testimony of the third person is not admissible as original or substantive evidence as to the identity of the accused as the guilty actor, 59 although there is some authority to the contrary. 60

b. Particular Bases for Identification [565-576]

§ 565 Physical characteristics

The identification of the accused by the witness may be based on a recognition of his physical characteristics and appearance, or on some mark on, or peculiarity of, the accused. 61

While several courts have ruled it improper to admit in evidence a sketch of the defendant drawn by a police artist from a description given him by a witness to identify the defendant, 62 others have determined that such evidence is admissible. 63

Evidence is also admissible to show that the defendant has altered his appearance to avoid identification. 64

§ 565 ----Physical characteristics [SUPPLEMENT]

Practice Aids: 36 Am Jur Proof of Facts 3d 1, Proof of Criminal Identity or Paternity Through Polymerase Chain Reaction (PCR) Testing.

Case authorities:

In prosecution of two brothers for armed robbery of several establishments, testimony of investigating officers regarding photo lineup identification of defendants by witnesses was proper after inability of witnesses to make positive identification at trial as to which brother was involved, where original identification was made within days of crime when memory was fresher, defendant's appearance was substantially changed in 2 years since crime, and line-up photograph depicted defendant at time crime occurred. Harper v State (1994) 213 Ga App 444, 445 SE2d 303, 94 Fulton County D R 2095.

In prosecution for aiding and abetting burglary, photographic lineup was impermissibly suggestive and gave rise to substantial likelihood of misidentification, where witness was shown photos of defendant's face and one of his tennis shoes with fluorescent strings. State v Ostrem (1994, Minn App) 520 NW2d 426.

§ 566 Voice and sounds, generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Testimony by a witness that he recognized the accused by their voice is admissible, provided the witness has some basis for comparison of the accused's voice with the voice which he has identified as that of the accused. 65 It is acceptable that the witness had acquired his knowledge of the accused's voice after the event to which he testifies, as well as before that time. 66

Voice exemplar evidence is not admissible as of right but lies within the sound discretion of the trial court, which is in the best position to weigh its relevance, reliability, and whether its probative value is substantially outweighed by the danger that it will unfairly prejudice the other side or mislead the jury. 67

Ordinarily, testimony identifying the accused by recognition of his voice is regarded as direct evidence. 68 However, there is authority to the effect that such testimony constitutes opinion evidence which is not admissible unless the witness has a basis for his opinion, either by having acquired a familiarity with the accused's voice, or by virtue of the accused's voice having some peculiarity or characteristic making it easily recognizable. 69

Hesitancy or uncertainty on the part of a witness identifying an accused by voice recognition goes only to the weight and not to the admissibility of such identification. 70 Courtroom demonstrations testing the witness' ability to identify the accused's voice have been disallowed. 71

§ 566 ----Voice and sounds, generally [SUPPLEMENT]Case authorities:

In § 1983 suit based on police officers' alleged use of excessive force in arresting onlooker who criticized police conduct toward suspect, district court erred in excluding tape recording of police officers and dispatcher that contained statement "run him over," after it determined that it was not satisfied, after hearing one officer testify at trial, that voice on tape was his; district court should not have excluded tape on authentication grounds without making finding that no rational juror could have concluded that officer in question made statement. Ricketts v City of Hartford (1996, CA2 Conn) 74 F3d 1397, 43 Fed Rules Evid Serv 903, amd, on reh, in part, reh den, in part (1996, CA2 Conn) 1996 US App LEXIS 2302.

In prosecution for kidnapping and burglary, victim's voice identification of defendant was not impermissibly suggestive, although identification procedure was conducted in office of defendant's parole officer, suggesting that defendant was criminal, where there was no indication that defendant was criminal who raped victim, victim listened to voice of another man in parole office as well, and defendant's voice was in no way highlighted. State v Ripperger (1994, Iowa App) 514 NW2d 740.

In prosecution for felony murder and related offenses, trial court did not abuse its discretion by using tape recording of defendant's voice along with others, in attempting to attack credibility of witness who testified he recognized defendant's voice as that of customer, where defendant failed to take opportunity to establish proper foundation. State v Griffin (1993) 116 NM 689, 866 P2d 1156.

In prosecution for conspiracy to possess marijuana, trial court committed reversible error in admitting tape recording of drug transaction made by undercover officer, which was nearly incomprehensible, where prosecution identified voices of two undercover operatives and informer, but did not identify defendant's voice or voices of any alleged coconspirators, and admission of tape was prejudicial, since prosecution emphasized tape and encouraged jury to listen to it during their deliberations. Leos v State (1994, Tex Crim) 883 SW2d 209.

It is immaterial whether the witness saw the accused speak or merely heard his voice. Thus a witness who is able to identify the accused's voice may testify that statements made on a telephone were statements of the accused. 72 The identity of a person speaking on the telephone may be established by circumstantial evidence, 73 but a mere statement of identify by a caller on the telephone is not sufficient proof of the caller's identity. 74

Something more than the bare opinion of the developer of a technique and equipment which enable its operator to make a visual picture or "voiceprint" of a person's voice from a tape recording, however qualified as an expert the developer may be, is required in order to satisfy the court that identification by voiceprint technique and equipment has a sufficient scientific basis to produce uniform and reasonably reliable results. § 569 Identification by body part impressions; fingerprints

The correspondence of fingerprints found at the scene of a crime with those of the accused is admissible to identify the accused as the guilty actor. 77 Fingerprints taken without a warrant or court order and not obtained in the booking process are nevertheless admissible. 78 Likewise, fingerprints taken routinely as a result of the accused's incarceration for an unrelated offense, are admissible. 79

Fingerprints, when duly authenticated, are admissible to prove the identity of the defendant as being the same person previously convicted of other crimes, for purposes of enhanced sentencing under habitual offender statutes. 80

A defendant may show the absence of his fingerprints at the scene of a crime of which he is accused. 81

The introduction in evidence of a fingerprint record containing extraneous material which in itself is incompetent may or may not constitute reversible error, depending on such factors as whether the material was or was not seen by the jury or whether the objection thereto was waived by the defendant. 82 Thus, reversible error occurred in a burglary prosecution, where the trial court admitted into evidence, over objection, a photostatic copy of the defendant's master fingerprint card which contained certain information from which the jury could infer that the defendant had committed prior offenses. 83

On the other hand, use of a fingerprint card has been found not to be prejudicial where all objectionable portions relating to a prior offense were masked out and the jury was instructed not to examine the covered side of card. 84 Furthermore, there is no error in a court's refusal to delete the date and place of the taking of a fingerprint card, despite fact that the date precedes the offense currently being tried, where nothing on the card indicates that the defendant had any prior criminal involvement or that fingerprints had been taken for any reason other than mere noncriminal identification. 85

§ 569 ----Identification by body part impressions; fingerprints [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

The fact that the defendant's thumbprint was on a plastic clown mask found on the landing of the apartment house in which a murder victim was found was properly admitted into evidence. Commonwealth v Morris, 422 Mass 254, 662 NE2d 683.

If the only identification evidence is the defendant's fingerprint at the crime scene, the prosecution must prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the fingerprint was placed there during the crime. Commonwealth v Morris, 422 Mass 254, 662 NE2d 683.

Where there is evidence that a person touched an object and it is later proved that the defendant's fingerprints were on that object, an inference that the defendant was present at the time of the touching is warranted. Commonwealth v Morris, 422 Mass 254, 662 NE2d 683.

Evidence did not warrant a finding beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant's fingerprint was placed on a plastic clown mask during the murder at issue where (1) the mask was found on the landing of the apartment house in which the murder victim was found, (2) the Commonwealth's expert testified that he could not tell when the print was placed on the mask, (3) the jury was warranted in finding that one of the fleeing intruders dropped the mask where it was found, that conditions at the crime scene permitted the impression of a thumbprint on the smooth, clean surface of the mask, and that a fingerprint is very fragile and is subject to smudging and obliteration, and (4) the jury was also warranted in inferring that the mask had been concealed in some way when it was brought to the scene. Commonwealth v Morris, 422 Mass 254, 662 NE2d 683.

The trial court did not err in a first-degree murder prosecution by admitting evidence concerning fingerprints taken from defendant in 1989 where the prosecutor deleted any reference to the date when the fingerprints were taken after defendant objected. The fingerprint card as admitted contained no evidence of any prior criminal arrests, indictments, or convictions. Moreover, there was no prejudicial error in the manner in which the card was admitted, even though defendant contended that there was prejudice in attempting to admit the card with the date, then whiting out the date in the jury's presence. State v Baity (1995) 340 NC 65, 455 SE2d 621.

The State submitted substantial evidence of circumstances from which the jury could find in a prosecution for murder, burglary, robbery, and attempted rape that defendant's fingerprints could only have been impressed at the time the crimes charged were committed where the State's evidence showed that the victim was wearing her eyeglasses all day on the day the crimes were committed; the victim was studying or reading most of that day; she was reading when the group left at around 10:00 p.m. for a party, leaving her alone in the apartment; the furniture was in order and the victim was sitting on the sofa with her eyeglasses on, reading the newspaper when the group left the apartment; when the group returned approximately an hour later, the apartment was in disarray, the victim's lifeless body was lying on the floor away from the sofa, which had been moved, and her eyeglasses were on the coffee table; no one else was in the apartment; and defendant's fingerprint was found on the inside lens of the victim's eyeglasses. This evidence, disclosing the circumstances under which the eyeglasses were found, when combined with other testimony placing defendant in the vicinity of the victim's apartment, constitutes substantial evidence from which the jury could find that defendant's fingerprints could only have been impressed on the lens between the hours of 10:00 p.m. and 11:05 p.m. Since the evidence also showed that the crimes were committed during the same period, the fingerprint evidence logically tends to show that defendant was present and participated in the commission of the crimes. State v Montgomery (1995) 341 NC 553, 461 SE2d 732.

There was no error in a prosecution for first-degree murder, burglary, robbery, and attempted rape in the admission of testimony that an expert had compared a fingerprint from the crime scene with a fingerprint card from defendant on file before his arrest. Defendant's use of the fingerprint expert's report opened the door and created confusion which the State could clear up by introducing evidence that the report was based on a ten-print card that was on file prior to defendant's arrest for this crime. State v Montgomery (1995) 341 NC 553, 461 SE2d 732.

The admission in evidence of fingerprints, palm prints, or bare footprints which the defendant allowed to be taken is not violative of defendant's privilege against self-incrimination. 88 Indeed, the privilege is not violated even where the accused is compelled to submit to the taking of prints. 89

It is not required that the accused be assisted by counsel 90 or that he be given the Miranda warnings 91 at the time fingerprints are taken.

§ 572 Footprints and tracks produced by shoes or boots

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

The correspondence of footprints or tracks found near the scene of a crime to the shoes or tracks of the accused is admissible to identify the accused as the guilty actor. 92

In a number of cases, testimony showing the existence of footprints or tracks near the scene of the crime has been held admissible even without an attempt to compare them with the shoes or tracks of the accused. 93 However, in other cases, it has been held necessary that the accused be connected with the footprints or tracks to be identified in order for evidence of their correspondence to his shoes or tracks to be considered competent. 94

Some courts have allowed photographs of footprints to be introduced in evidence in connection with the testimony of a witness as to the correspondence of the footprints or tracks found near the scene of the crime to the shoes or tracks of the accused. 95 Indeed, a number of courts have permitted plaster casts of footprints found near the scene of the crime to be introduced in evidence, the purpose usually being to show the correspondence of such footprints to the shoes of the accused. 96

Trial judge did not abuse discretion in allowing FBI agent to testify in prosecution for robbery and attempted murder as expert on forensic foot morphology, and to state that he had compared casts of footprints found at scene of robbery with running shoes found near defendant's place of employment and that running shoes matched impressions left at scene of robbery, and that he had examined insoles of running shoes, compared wear pattern on insoles to X-rays and impressions of defendant's feet, and that running shoes had been worn by defendant or someone with identical foot morphology. Thiel v State (Alaska App) 762 P2d 478

In addition to circumstantial evidence that defendant ran from police officer when spotted near crime scene shortly after its occurrence, unusual size and tread of defendant's tennis shoes matched footprints found at scene. State v Gorka (Mo App) 782 SW2d 718.

Trial judge did not err in admitting testimony of police officer concerning visual comparison he made of wavy pattern in shoe print found outside basement window at scene of burglary with pattern on tennis shoes taken from defendant after arrest; it was not denial of due process to fail to exclude such testimony merely because no photograph or plaster cast was made where officer did not deliberately refuse to preserve evidence but was prevented from doing so by poor lighting and wet ground. § 573 Blood tests

Electrophoresis allows typing of individual blood proteins and enzymes found in a blood sample by a method that separates electrically charged molecules. It has been observed that the overwhelming majority of jurisdictions has found electrophoresis to have been generally accepted by the scientific community, 97 and the results of blood-grouping tests are thus generally admissible in criminal prosecutions for purposes of identification. 98 While their probative value is somewhat tenuous, there is little, if any, prejudice which can arise from their admission. 99

The results of blood-grouping tests are admissible in a criminal case as a circumstance bearing on the identification of the accused. 1

§ 574 DNA identification evidence

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

DNA identification evidence—expressly or impliedly including statistical calculations of band pattern frequency in the population—is ordinarily admissible to aid in determining the perpetrator's identity, on grounds that the technique has been scientifically accepted as reliable, or that the proof is at least as probative as prejudicial. 2 DNA identification is based on the universally accepted principle that no two people share exactly the same genetic configuration, that the length and composition of certain DNA base-pair sequences varies from one individual to another at several million sites along the human chromosome, and that by examining the sizes of enough fragments at different sites on different chromosomes, statistical procedures based on known sequence frequencies in the population can be employed to establish the uniqueness of any one person's DNA pattern. 3

◆ Practice guide: Where the general admissibility of DNA identification evidence has not been conclusively settled, the existence or absence of uniform standards defining a proper methodology for forensic DNA testing, and concerning the qualifications of laboratories and their personnel, may bear heavily on a determination whether the scientific community has recognized the technique as capable of producing reliable results, as well as on whether the results in a particular case can be accepted. 4 In a particular case, the testing laboratory's noncompliance with appropriate standards may be shown as a ground for refusing to admit its conclusions into evidence. 5

Admissibility of DNA identification evidence. 84 ALR4th 313.

Case authorities:

DNA evidence will be admitted along with statistical estimates of coincidental matches occurring in Native American population only, in case in which son is charged with raping mother, who recanted her story on one occasion, because DNA evidence acquired from semen from mother's nightgown, slip, and sheet is based on scientific knowledge and grounded in methods and procedures of science, tempered by legitimate concerns regarding statistical probability calculations of Native American database and alternative, innocuous, and reasonable explanations of semen's presence, and is admissible as relevant and not unduly prejudicial under FRE 403. United States v Coronado-Cervantes (1996, DC NM) 912 F Supp 497.

In prosecution for murder, DNA "matching" evidence and population frequency statistical evidence was admissible where there was evidence to satisfy three-pronged test: (1) that theory advanced was generally accepted in scientific community and supported conclusion that DNA testing could produce reliable results; (2) that techniques used to conduct testing were capable of producing reliable result and were generally accepted in scientific community; and (3) that tests conducted were generally accepted techniques and were performed without error. Perry v State (1992, Ala App) 606 So 2d 224.

In paternity action, trial court erred in admitting reports of DNA testing where reports were not accompanied by authenticating affidavits; there was no testimony that tests were scientifically accepted or that procedures required to make tests valid had been followed. Mattox v Department of Revenue, Child Support Enforcement Div. ex rel. Neeson (1994, Alaska) 875 P2d 763.

In prosecution for first degree murder in which Cellmark Diagnostic Laboratories (Cellmark) performed DNA testing on blood found on defendant's shirt, as well as victim's bone and muscle samples, trial court erred in permitting Cellmark technician to testify that, given match of autorads from blood on defendant's shirt and victim's tissue, probability of random match ranged from one in 14 billion to, more conservatively, one in 60 million. Principles and theory underlying DNA test and Cellmark's match criteria are generally accepted in relevant scientific community. General acceptance regarding these matters permits judicial notice of DNA theory and techniques—at least insofar as Cellmark is concerned—for ascertaining and declaring match. If testing shows that samples do not match, then conclusion is that they are from different individuals; if testing shows that samples do match, conclusion is that they "may be" from same individual. However, there is no general acceptance in relevant scientific community for Cellmark's random match probability calculations and because these calculations do not meet Frye test, they are inadmissible. However, erroneous admission of statistical probability calculations was harmless in view of overwhelming evidence of guilt. State v Bible (1993) 175 Ariz 549, 858 P2d 1152, 145 Ariz Adv Rep 3.

Evidence from DNA testing in form of probability that match shown by testing was simply random occurrence was inadmissible, as such probability calculations were not generally accepted in scientific community. State v Clark (1994, Ariz App) 887 P2d 572, 164 Ariz Adv Rep 68.

In prosecution for robbery, kidnapping and unlawful sexual intercourse, trial court erred in admitting determined match between defendant's DNA and semen samples obtained from vaginal smears and victim's panties, though error was harmless, where court declined to admit state's corresponding statistical probability that found match might have occurred by chance—one in six million. DNA evidence is admissible only when both evidence of match and statistical evidence of match are admissible. Nelson v State (1993, Del Sup) 628 A2d 69.

In murder prosecution, trial court erred in admitting results of DNA testing, where court failed to premise admissibility of such results on determination that general scientific principles and techniques involved in DNA testing were valid and capable of producing reliable results, and that tester himself had substantially performed scientific procedures in acceptable manner. Johnson v State (1994) 264 Ga 456, 448 SE2d 177, 94 Fulton County D R 3059.

In prosecution for murder in which evidence of another murder was admitted as "signature crime" probative of identity, trial court did not err in admitting DNA test results used to link defendant to other murder, despite his claim that procedures employed by testing laboratory were unreliable, where defendant did not challenge qualifications of DNA experts who testified. Once trial court has ruled witness qualified as matter of law to give expert testimony regarding DNA analysis, subsequent evaluation of that evidence goes only to its weight as matter of fact. Lockhart v State (1993, Ind) 609 NE2d 1093.

In criminal proceeding, evidence of DNA profile is admissible to prove or disprove identity of person. Jackson v State (1992) 92 Md App 304, 608 A2d 782, cert den 328 Md 238, 614 A2d 84.

The court properly admitted expert testimony concerning the probability of a match between the defendant's DNA in the general population where the testimony was based on the ceiling principle, which is a conservative approach based on assumptions favorable to a criminal defendant. Commonwealth v Lanigan (1994) 419 Mass 15, 641 NE2d 1342.

In prosecution for aggravated murder, trial court did not err in holding that state's evidence of identification based DNA testing of semen samples seized at crime scene and samples taken from defendant's blood was admissible, despite defendant's claim that specific testing procedures used did not guarantee reliability. Although defendant's experts testified that testing laboratory's opinion, that samples obtained from crime scene and defendant "matched," was in error and that database used by testing laboratory was "scientifically unacceptable," their testimony was controverted by testimony of state's experts on validity of testing process used. It could not be said that state's evidence, concerning testing procedures used, was so lacking that it had no weight whatever and, although reasonable factfinders might differ as to whether tests performed were accurate, it would be improper to preempt jury's determination. State v Futch (1993) 123 Or App 176, 860 P2d 264.

In prosecution for aggravated murder, murder, sexual abuse, and burglary, forensic DNA evidence developed by polymerase chain reaction method was properly admitted as relevant and helpful to trier of fact; results were not expressed in terms of statistical probabilities capable of creating aura of absolute identification, but were expressed as conclusion that identified gene type common to sample and defendant, which was one found in certain percentage of population group; probative value was not outweighed by potential prejudice. State v Lyons (1993) 124 Or App 598, 863 P2d 1303.

In rape prosecution, destruction of samples of blood, hair, and tissue in type of DNA testing that necessarily consumed samples was not result of intentional act of district attorney and did not warrant dismissal of charges against defendants, where, although type of DNA testing ordered could not have yielded desired results, district attorney's act in ordering wrong type of test was not intentional but, rather, due to lack of sufficient knowledge about DNA testing. Commonwealth v Francis (1994, Pa Super) 648 A2d 49.

In prosecution on seven counts of rape, trial court properly admitted evidence of DNA typing; scientific principle and restricted fragment length polymorphism (RFLP) method of DNA typing are universally accepted and therefore admissible. However, trial court erred in admitting testimony that defendant's DNA "matched" perpetrator's DNA since it was unsupported by valid probability statistics. State v Cauthron (1993) 120 Wash 2d 879, 846 P2d 502.

In prosecution for first-degree murder allegedly committed in perpetration of aggravated rape, trial court did not err in allowing evidence of DNA testing to be introduced at trial under statute providing that "[e]vidence of deoxyribonucleic acid profiles, genetic markers of the blood, and secretor status of the saliva offered to establish the identity of the offender of any crime is relevant as proof in conformity with the Louisiana Code of Evidence." State v Quatrevingt (1992, La App 4th Cir) 617 So 2d 484, reh gr (La App 4th Cir) 1993 La App LEXIS 1842.

§ 575 Trailing by bloodhounds, generally

View Entire Section

Go to Supplement

Most courts in which the question of the admissibility of evidence of trailing by bloodhounds has been presented take the position that upon a proper foundation being laid by proof that the dogs were qualified to trail human beings, 6 and that the circumstances surrounding the trailing were such as to make it probable that the person trailed was the guilty party, such evidence is admissible and may be permitted to go to the jury, for what it is worth, as one of the circumstances which may tend to connect the defendant with the crime. 7 But even under this rule, bloodhound evidence is not admissible where the trailing is so uncertain and confused that it has no tendency to prove the defendant's guilt. 8 Nor is evidence of the act of a dog in trailing one accused of a crime admissible if it was not allowed to follow its inclination during the process. 9

In some other jurisdictions, evidence of tracking by a bloodhound is not admissible. 10

§ 576 --Proper foundation for evidence

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Bloodhound tracking evidence is admissible if:

- (1) the dog has an acute power of scent determination;
 - (2) the dog was trained to track humans and could do so with a high degree of accuracy;
 - (3) the handler is qualified and experienced;
 - (4) the trail had not become stale or contaminated beyond the dog's ability to follow the trail; and
 - (5) the dog began on the trail at a location where the perpetrator was known to have been.
- 11

The fact that the dog has not been exposed to an article carrying defendant's scent before the tracking began does not render the tracking suspect, since it is sufficient that the dog was taken to the place where defendant was last observed. 12

Some jurisdictions require proof that the dog is of a breed known for its ability to pick up human scent. 13 If a dog's owner or handler identifies the dog as a bloodhound and the dog justifies this description by his performance, then the pure blood requirement for introduction of evidence of the dog's conduct has been met. 14

A proper foundation for the admission of bloodhound evidence has been found to have been laid where——the officer testified by way of foundation to the ability of the bloodhounds to track human scents, and further testified that he had trained the bloodhounds for seven years and had taken at least six courses in handling that species of dog, and that dogs under his supervision had an approximate 80-percent success rate. 15

—there was testimony to the effect that the dog used in the investigation was a bloodhound trained to follow a trail, that the dog had been used over 100 times to track individuals, that dog had been placed on railroad tracks near where the robber was last seen, and that the dog picked up the track there and followed it to the house where the defendant was found. 16

—evidence amply demonstrated the dog's extensive training in human scent tracking, its record of success in tracking, and that dog was taken to the place where the perpetrator's recent presence was established, and where court properly instructed jury that evidence was to be viewed with caution. 17

—the dog's qualifications were shown, the robbery scene was protected until the dog's arrival, the dog was placed on the trail where it seemed apparent that the perpetrators of the crime had been, there were no interruptions in the tracking, the dog went to the car where the defendant was hiding along with two other men, and the defendant was subsequently identified by the robbery victim. 18

—the dog tracked the defendant's presence some sixty days after the disappearance of the murder victim, and the dog's trainer testified that the dog had been reliably used in 100 cases in which tracks were between 60 and 70 days old. 19

—defense counsel stipulated to the credentials of the dog's handler, the dog had been on duty for more than one year, the dog had passed all qualifying tests, and the dog reacted with signs indicating he recognized the defendant by scent when commanded to make such a decision. 20

It is well established that communications by telephone are admissible in evidence where relevant to the fact or facts in issue. 21 The admissibility of telephone conversations is governed by the same rules of evidence which govern the admission of oral statements made in face-to-face conversations, 22 except that the party against whom the conversation is sought to be used must ordinarily be identified. 23 If, however, evidence of what was said in a conversation, if made face to face, would be inadmissible as hearsay, proof of it as a telephone conversation is likewise inadmissible. 24

§ 577 ----Generally [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

In products liability action, memorandum containing substance of telephone conversation was properly excluded where there was no evidence that person making notation regularly kept or was under duty to keep written records of his phone conversations, or that he had ever engaged in regular practice of memorializing phone conversations.

§ 578 Identification of participants in conversation

--

Generally, and other than with respect to telephone calls made in the regular course of business, 25 in order to introduce evidence of a telephone conversation otherwise unobjectionable, the identity of the person who is claimed to have talked over the telephone must first be satisfactorily established by the party seeking the introduction of the telephone conversation. 26 Otherwise, it has been said, the door would be opened for fraud and imposition. 27 When the communication is of such a nature that it can be properly made only to a particular individual, or where a particular individual is sought to be charged with an admission made in a telephone conversation, such person's identity must be shown. 28

It is not necessary that the witness be able, at the time of hearing the telephone conversation, to identify the person with whom they had the conversation; it is sufficient if the knowledge which enabled him to make the identification was obtained afterward. 29 Nor is it necessary, in all instances, that the proof of the identification be made before the introduction of the evidence of the conversation; such conversation may, in the discretion of the court, be admitted subject to identification. 30

§ 578 ----Identification of participants in conversation [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Obscene telephone call was traced to defendant's apartment and he was arrested minutes after call ended. Police then called complainant and she identified defendant's voice over telephone. Held, this voice identification procedure was not unnecessarily suggestive and there was no substantial likelihood of irreparable misidentification. Trial court did not err by overruling motion to suppress identification testimony. Williams v State (1993, Tex App Houston (14th Dist)) 850 SW2d 784, petition for discretionary review gr (Sep 15, 1993) and petition for discretionary review gr (Sep 15, 1993).

§ 579 --Calls made in regular course of business

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

According to most of the cases passing on the matter, evidence is admissible as to a conversation over the telephone where the witness called for a designated person or firm at his or its place of business and the person answering the call claimed to be the person called for, or to represent him or it, and the conversation carried on is one regarding the business transacted by such person or firm. 31 Thus, in an action for personal injuries, the mother of the party injured during the inspection of a rental house could testify to a telephone conversation she had with the wife of the owner of the house pursuant to the rule that any one who answers a telephone call at a place of business is presumed to speak for the company in respect to general business carried on by such company, where the evidence indicated that the owner's rental business was part of the general business carried on by him through the use of that telephone. 32

§ 580 --Manner and sufficiency of identification

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

It is a broad general principle that a person may be recognized and identified by his voice. 33 Accordingly, when the admission in evidence of a telephone conversation is sought for the purpose of establishing the identity of one of the parties to the conversation, the testimony of a witness acquainted with the person whose identity is in question is admissible with respect to identifying such person's voice. 34 Such person's identity may also be established by other circumstances which satisfactorily indicate the identity of the individual. 35

Testimony by the person receiving a telephone call that the person on the other end of the line identified himself as a specific person is, alone, insufficient to establish the caller's identity. 36 However, courts routinely find a call to be authenticated when self-identification is combined with virtually any circumstantial evidence. 37

Circumstances adequately established that defendant was caller to employee in state health department to whom she had sent Medicaid provider enrollment application, and substance of telephone conversation with employee was therefore properly admitted in prosecution of defendant and codefendants on racketeering charges involving Medicaid fraud, where employee made call to number defendant had provided and received return call same day, during that period defendant was seeking Medicaid provider number she eventually received thus indicating her strong interest in returning call, and caller provided defendant's father's address as address to which Medicaid payments should be sent. United States v Khan (1995, CA2 NY) 53 F3d 507.

§ 581 Testimony of bystander

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

A telephone conversation between the parties to a proceeding upon the subject matter of the litigation, which has been testified to by one of the parties, may also be testified to by a bystander, so far as he heard the conversation, in corroboration of the testimony of the other witnesses regarding the conversation. 38 The evidence of a bystander as to what he overheard during a telephone conversation has been admitted as original evidence, and not merely in corroboration of one of the speakers; at least this is so insofar as the identity of the parties to the conversation is established. 39

Some cases go so far as to permit a bystander to testify not only as to what he overheard the speaker in his presence say, but to the entire conversation as detailed by such speaker, 40 although as a general rule, the testimony of a bystander as to the portion of a telephone conversation which he has not overheard is excluded as hearsay. 41

In some cases the evidence of a bystander as to a telephone conversation that he has overheard is rejected, usually because of the lack of identification of the person at the other end of the line. 42 In particular, it has been held that such evidence, given in an attempt to establish agency between the parties to the conversation, should be rejected. 43

§ 582 Fact that call was made or received

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

In cases in which the fact that a telephone call was made or received becomes a relevant one by reason of its bearing upon a material issue, the fact may become admissible in evidence as an independently relevant one irrespective of the substance or narration involved, or its truth or falsity. This is true both as to criminal 44 and as to civil 45 cases. As is true generally, however, such evidence is inadmissible if it is not relevant to any material issue in the case. 46

§ 583 Sound recordings

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

It is generally held that evidence offered in the form of a sound recording is not inadmissible because of its form, if properly authenticated. 47 No substantial federal constitutional question is presented by admission in evidence of electronic recordings. 48 The argument that sound-recorded evidence is hearsay, because the recording in effect constitutes an unsworn mechanical witness not subject to cross-examination, has been rejected. 49

The admission in evidence of a sound recording should be preceded by a foundation disclosing that:

(1) it is authentic and correct;

(2) the testimony elicited was freely and voluntarily made, without any kind of duress; all required warnings were given and all necessary acknowledgments and waivers were knowingly and intelligently given;

- (3) it does not contain matter otherwise not admissible into evidence; and
- (4) it is of such clarity as to be intelligible and enlightening to the jury. 50

Audiotape of conversation between cocaine distribution defendant and informant, in which defendant referred to drug-related killing, was probative of relationship between defendant and informant and was not more prejudicial since it did not implicate defendant in any killing. United States v Broadus (1993, CA6 Mich) 7 F3d 460.

People failed to lay proper foundation for introduction of tape recording of conversation among undercover officer, defendant, and codefendant since they failed to prove by clear and convincing evidence that tape recording was genuine and had not been tampered with, where undercover officer died prior to trial, and codefendant did not testify that conversation had been fairly and accurately reproduced. People v Encarnacion (1992, 4th Dept) 187 AD2d 1007, 591 NYS2d 127, app den 81 NY2d 970, 598 NYS2d 771, 615 NE2d 228.

The State's introduction of a portion of defense counsel's tape-recorded interview with the State's principal witness in which defense counsel stated, following a discussion of threats to the witness and a statement by the witness that his going home made his mother and grandmother nervous, that "I'm going to be nervous being in court with you" did not reflect upon the substantive aspects of defendant's case and would not necessarily portray defendant's attorney's representation of him as unworthy of serious consideration by the jury. Moreover, any error in the admission of this statement did not constitute plain error, defendant having failed to object thereto, since defendant has not shown that a different result would have been reached at trial had this portion of the recording not been played before the jury in light of the strong evidence of defendant's guilt, including eyewitness testimony that defendant shot and killed the victim, evidence of motive, and evidence that defendant and his friends threatened the State's principal witness in an effort to prevent him from testifying. State v Mason (1994) 337 NC 165, 446 SE2d 58.

The literal significance of the word "alibi" is "elsewhere," 56 and any evidence which tends to establish the whereabouts of one accused of a crime at the time of its commission is admissible in support of an alibi. 57 That evidence to establish an alibi is cumulative is not necessarily a reason for its exclusion. 58 While the prosecution is permitted considerable latitude in its proof as to when the crime charged was committed, this in no way varies the rules of evidence concerning the materiality or competency of rebuttal evidence. 59

In a few states statutes require the giving of notice to the prosecution of the accused's intention to rely upon an alibi as a defense in a criminal proceeding, and forbid the introduction of evidence to establish an alibi unless the required notice has been given. 60

Evidence is competent in rebuttal of the defense of an alibi which has a tendency to prove that the accused was at the place of the crime at the time the crime was committed. 61 It has been said that the sole test of the admissibility of evidence in rebuttal of the defense of alibi is whether the evidence offered tends to prove the fact sought to be established.

§ 587 Evidence incriminating persons other than accused

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

It is competent for the accused in a criminal prosecution to show by any legal evidence that another person committed the crime with which he is charged and that he is innocent of any participation in that Crime. 63 In general, anything in the conduct, appearance, or declarations of a third person, subsequent to the commission of a crime for which another is on trial, which tends to connect such person with the crime, is admissible in evidence in behalf of the person charged to show that such other person, and not the accused, committed the crime. 64

To be admissible in a criminal prosecution, evidence that a third party committed the crime with which the defendant is charged need not show substantial proof of a probability that the third person committed the act; it need only be capable of raising a reasonable doubt of defendant's guilt. 65 However, evidence of mere motive or opportunity to commit the crime in another person, without more, will not suffice, 66

there must be direct or circumstantial evidence linking the third person to the actual perpetration of the crime. 67

◆ Observation: Courts should simply treat third-party culpability evidence like any other: if relevant it is admissible unless its probative value is substantially outweighed by the risk of undue delay, prejudice, or confusion. 68 Courts must weigh the facts in connection with such an inquiry carefully, and should avoid a hasty conclusion as to the credibility of the evidence, which determination is properly the province of the jury. 69

According to most of the courts considering the question, testimony as to acts and declarations of the person against whom a crime, such as homicide, was committed which tend to show fear of one other than the defendant is not admissible in a trial on behalf of the accused, since it is considered to be too remote, 70 although there is authority which favors the admissibility of such evidence. 71

Evidence of the motive of one other than the defendant to commit the crime is not admissible where there is no other proof in the case which tends to connect such other person with the offense with which the defendant is charged. 72 However, proof of a third person's motive to commit an offense is admissible where there is other testimony tending to connect such person with the commission of the crime. 73

§ 587 ----Evidence incriminating persons other than accused [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

The trial court did not err in a prosecution in which defendant was convicted of first-degree murder, first-degree rape, and first-degree sexual offense by refusing to admit testimony that the victim was assaulted by someone other than defendant on the night she was murdered where the excluded testimony cannot be said to give rise to more than mere speculation and conjecture of another's guilt. State v Moseley (1994) 338 NC 1, 449 SE2d 412.

The trial court did not err by excluding a detective's testimony that, immediately after investigating the murders at issue, he believed that a named person had knowledge of, and might have been involved in, the murders since this testimony constituted mere conjecture that another person was involved in the murders, did not point directly to another's guilt, and was not inconsistent with defendant's guilt. State v Rose (1994) 339 NC 172, 451 SE2d 211.

The trial court did not err in a first- degree murder prosecution arising from an armed robbery by excluding testimony that an accomplice who testified against defendant had held a gun on the victim in a prior robbery. Although defendant argued that this evidence was relevant to prove that the accomplice had used the gun in the robbery in this case, it was inadmissible under GS § 8C-1, Rule 404(b) and State v. McNeil, 326 NC 712. It was not error to exclude evidence that tended to prove a person other than the defendant had committed a crime when the evidence did not show the same person had committed both crimes. State v Grace (1995) 341 NC 640, 461 SE2d 330.

The trial court did not err in a prosecution for conspiracy and first- degree murder by excluding evidence that decedent's estranged wife had a motive to kill her husband where the evidence offered by defendant pointed solely to motive and was not inconsistent with defendant's guilt, and defendant was able to present relevant evidence in support of his theory through the testimony of other witnesses. State v Larrimore (1995) 340 NC 119, 456 SE2d 789.

In a murder prosecution in which the major disputed issue was whether defendant was the second shooter involved in the killing, the trial court did not err by excluding testimony that a man named Prioleau was at one time a suspect in the police investigation and that his fingerprints had been submitted with other evidence to an SBI crime laboratory since this evidence neither pointed directly to the guilt of Prioleau as the second shooter nor tended to exonerate defendant. State v Burke (1995) 342 NC 113, 463 SE2d 212.

The trial court did not err by refusing to permit a witness to testify in a murder trial that an eyewitness's description of the assailant more accurately fit her son than her grandson, the defendant, where three eyewitnesses identified defendant as the man they saw shoot the victim; the witness was not present when the shooting occurred; and the excluded testimony did not directly point to the guilt of a third party. State v McCray (1995) 342 NC 123, 463 SE2d 176.

The trial court did not err in a prosecution for multiple counts of first-degree sexual offense and taking indecent liberties with a child by refusing to allow defendant to introduce the results of medical examinations of other minor children who did not testify at trial but who had allegedly participated in and witnessed the abuse of the victims who did testify and defendant testified that he did not abuse any of his children. GS § 8C-1, Rule 608(b). State v Parker (1995) 119 NC App 328, 459 SE2d 9.

§ 588 Public surveys or polls

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

The admissibility of the results of a survey or poll of public or consumers' opinion, recognition, preference, or the like, has been recognized or upheld ⁷⁴ on the ground of sheer necessity for admission, ⁷⁵ or on the ground that the witness in testifying to the results of a poll or survey is merely indicating the state of mind of the interviewees, thus eliminating the necessity that they be cross-examined, ⁷⁶ and obviating the objection that such testimony is hearsay. ⁷⁷ Thus, in prosecution for criminal obscenity, exclusion of a public opinion survey was reversible error where the pertinent statute provided that evidence was admissible in obscenity prosecutions to show the degree, if any, of public acceptance of the material, where no objections were made to methodology or partiality of survey, where questions and answers were relevant in that they showed that majority of the state's residents found depictions of nudity and actual or pretended sexual activities acceptable. ⁷⁸

Alleged technical deficiencies in the conduct of a survey, such as poor sampling, inexperienced interviewers, poorly designed questions, and other errors in execution, have been held to affect a survey's weight but not its admissibility. ⁷⁹ On the other hand, a number of decisions have found the results of a survey or opinion poll inadmissible in evidence, as amounting to hearsay ⁸⁰ or inadmissible because of defects in the methods or conduct of the survey, including bias in the questions asked or the way in which they were asked. ⁸¹

§ 589 Rule of exclusion

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Evidence obtained by means of illegal search and seizure methods ⁸² or as a result of a coerced confession ⁸³ is generally not admissible in criminal or quasi-criminal actions ⁸⁴ where a timely application is made to suppress or exclude the evidence. ⁸⁵

The exclusionary rule is enforced as a means of deterring police misconduct. ⁸⁶ The rule is designed to enforce constitutional rights by deterring violations, rather than by granting the victim redress or restitution. ⁸⁷ Thus, the exclusionary rule does not preclude civil actions for wrongful searches and seizures ⁸⁸ or the levy of criminal charges against officers guilty of maliciously procuring a search warrant or illegally conducting a search. 89

◆ Observation: The exclusionary rule may also be applied to suppress evidence obtained in contravention of the American Bar Association's Code of Professional Responsibility. Suppression is not, however, a necessary consequence of such a violation. 90

CCP art 38.23, excluding evidence obtained by officer in violation of laws, applies to evidence obtained by means of criminal trespass but does not apply to evidence obtained by means of civil, or common law, trespass. Officer who walked up defendant's driveway to door of garage, through which he smelled marihuana, did not commit criminal trespass or violate reasonable expectation of privacy in driveway. Garage was at front of house, officer did not cross fence or other obstruction to get to driveway, there was no sign prohibiting entry of driveway, and driveway also served as means of access to front door of house, which did not have separate sidewalk. Delosreyes v State (1993, Tex App Houston (1st Dist)) 853 SW2d 684.

§ 590 Effectiveness of exclusionary rule in deterring police misconduct

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Several scholars ⁹¹ and the General Accounting Office ⁹² have conducted empirical research into the impact of the exclusionary rule on criminal prosecutions, attempting to determine whether the exclusionary rule has any deterrent effect on the police. The United States Supreme Court has noted the research and the criticisms of it, and has stated that no one has been able to establish with assurance whether the exclusionary rule has the desired deterrent effect in situations where it is applied. ⁹³ Accordingly, the Court has not relied on the empirical studies in formulating the exclusionary rule, but only on the Court's own assumptions regarding human nature and the interrelationships between the various components of the law enforcement system. ⁹⁴

While questions regarding the efficacy of the exclusionary rule have led the Supreme Court to decline to extend it, ⁹⁵ and to recognize new exceptions to it, ⁹⁶ the court has expressed concern that the systemic effects of proposed exceptions to the rule be considered, lest the exceptions swallow the rule as a result of the pressure to introduce all incriminating evidence in each and every criminal case, no matter how obtained. ⁹⁷

Ordinarily, the exclusionary rule does not apply to arrests and searches made by foreign authorities in their own country and in the enforcement of foreign law unless:

(1) the conduct of the foreign officers shocks the conscience of the United States court;

(2) the United States officials participated in the foreign search or interrogation; or

(3) the foreign authorities acted as agents for their United States counterparts. 99

§ 592 Proceedings in which exclusionary rule is applied; criminal or civil proceedings

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

The general exclusionary rule is applied in criminal proceedings, and in proceedings of a quasi-criminal nature in which criminal sanctions, such as forfeiture, may be enforced. 1 As for civil proceedings, the Supreme Court has noted that it has never applied the exclusionary rule to exclude evidence in such actions 2 and has held that the exclusionary rule is not applicable in civil deportation hearings, since the likely deterrent value of using the rule in such proceedings is not sufficient to outweigh the social costs of its application. 3

The lower federal courts have sometimes suppressed evidence in cases where federal officers who committed unconstitutional seizures sought to use such evidence in federal civil proceedings. 4 One Federal Circuit has taken the position that it is unsound to reject the exclusionary rule in all civil proceedings, preferring to apply it in civil proceedings with respect to which it has a realistic prospect of achieving marginal deterrence, but not in civil proceedings in which the deterrence rationale for the rule would not be served. 5 Accordingly, application of the exclusionary rule in proceedings under the Occupational Safety and Health Act 6 has been upheld on the ground that the exclusionary sanction would have a potential deterrent impact on the actions of OSHA officials and inspectors. 7 The rule has also been applied in certain customs 8 and tax 9 proceedings, but has been rejected in a civil tax proceeding in which the allegedly illegal search and seizure which produced the disputed evidence was conducted by an agency other than the agency which brought the proceeding, the court taking the position that the deterrence rationale of the exclusionary rule would not be served under such circumstances. 10

The exclusionary rule is not applied in civil cases where private parties seek to introduce evidence obtained through unauthorized searches made by state officials. 11 Illegally obtained evidence is also admissible in administrative proceedings, such as unfair labor practice proceedings, which are not criminal or quasi-criminal in nature. 12

The federal statute relating to evidence obtained as a result of an illegal interception of a wire or oral communication 13 provides that no part of the contents of any such communication and no evidence derived therefrom may be received in evidence in any trial, hearing, or other proceeding in or before any court, grand jury, department, officer, agency, legislative committee, or other authority. As will be seen, this statutory exclusionary rule in wiretapping cases is broader than the general exclusionary rule in some respects, 14 although the general intent of Congress was to codify then-existing search and seizure law. 15

§ 593 --States and state court proceedings

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

While the general exclusionary rule is enforceable against the states through the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, 16 the states are not foreclosed by the due process clause from balancing the benefits of deterring police misconduct against the costs of excluding reliable evidence of criminal activity. 17 The statutory exclusionary rule relating to intercepted wire or oral communications 18 also applies to the states and the political subdivisions of the states. Of course, the states have the power to develop workable rules governing searches and seizures, so long as those rules do not violate the Fourth Amendment and do not violate the rule that illegally seized evidence is inadmissible against one who has standing to complain. 19

A state constitutional amendment eliminating the exclusionary rule for evidence seized in violation of state but not federal law does not violate the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. 20 Thus, a state has the power to eliminate the exclusionary rule as a remedy for violations of a state constitutional right against warrantless searches of trash. 21

Courts have differed over whether the exclusionary rule should prevent the use of illegally seized evidence in an attorney disciplinary proceeding. 22

§ 594 --Grand jury proceedings

The exclusionary rule is not applicable to grand jury proceedings, the Supreme Court believing that allowing a grand jury witness to invoke the exclusionary rule would unduly interfere with the effective and expeditious discharge of the duties of the grand jury, even though adoption of the exclusionary rule in this context might deter police misconduct. ²³ However, the wiretapping statutes do apply to grand jury proceedings, although a witness or a target of the grand jury inquiry does not have standing to request a full-blown suppression hearing. ²⁴

§ 594 --Grand jury proceedings [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

In prosecution for second-degree murder, trial court properly admitted witness' grand jury testimony containing her statement to police as past recollection recorded, where witness was eyewitness to murder, witness' statement to police was made on night of murder while details of event were still clear and fresh in her mind, witness testified at trial that she had no present memory of events and that her memory was not refreshed by reviewing her grand jury testimony or her police statement, witness testified that statement she gave to police was accurate and that she testified truthfully at grand jury proceeding, and although defense contended that witness' testimony was inherently unreliable since she tested positive for PCP after first day of testimony, there was no evidence in record that she was under influence of any controlled substance when she made her statement to police on night of murder or when she testified before grand jury. Carey v United States (1994, Dist Col App) 647 A2d 56.

Even though certain illegally seized evidence must be excluded in a criminal trial, this does not preclude the trial judge from using this excluded evidence for the purpose of determining the sentence. 25 The exclusionary rule is not applied for a second time at a sentencing hearing, since it is believed that this application of the rule would not have any additional deterrent effect, and since a trial judge should have unfettered access to information relevant to his sentencing decision. 26 Instead, illegally seized evidence may be challenged in a sentencing hearing only on the grounds that it is unreliable or that it was gathered for the express purpose of improperly influencing the sentencing judge. 27

§ 596 --Probation and parole revocation proceedings

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

At least four Federal Courts of Appeals have declined to apply the exclusionary rule in parole or probation revocation proceedings. 28 In the absence of police harassment of probationers or parolees, 29 it is believed that the suppression of evidence in revocation proceedings would only have a minimal deterrent effect on government agents. 30 In addition, a probationer or parolee is not endowed with all the rights which he possesses prior to conviction, and evidence which would not be admissible at trial can be considered in revocation proceedings. 31

However, the exclusionary rule has been applied in a probation revocation proceeding, rendering inadmissible evidence seized by a probation officer in an illegal warrantless search of a probationer's home. 32 Furthermore, evidence obtained by unconstitutional searches of a probationer's property has been ruled inadmissible in a federal probation revocation hearing. 33 Additionally, the statutory exclusionary rule relating to intercepted communications is applied in probation revocation proceedings. 34

§ 597 Effect of relationship between agency which committed unlawful act and agency which brought action; intersovereign and intrasovereign violations

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

In civil proceedings, exclusion of illegally obtained evidence is not required as a result of "intersovereign" violations—those in which the sovereign, such as a state, whose agents seized the disputed evidence is different from the sovereign, such as the federal government, which commenced the proceeding. 35 The Supreme Court has concluded that state officials will not be additionally deterred from conducting illegal searches and seizures by the possibility the evidence could be suppressed in a federal

The exclusionary rule is believed by the Supreme Court likely to be most effective when applied to "intrasovereign" violations—those committed by agents of the particular sovereign which brought the action in question. 37 However, when other factors significantly reduce the likely deterrent value of the exclusionary rule in such an action, the rule is not to be used in civil proceedings even if the agency officials whose conduct was unlawful are the same officials who subsequently brought the civil action. 38 Similarly, the exclusionary rule is not to be applied in a proceeding in which the allegedly illegal search and seizure which produced the disputed evidence was conducted by a federal agency other than the federal agency which brought the proceeding, despite the fact that both are agencies of the same sovereign, since the deterrence rationale would not be served by suppressing evidence from a proceeding when the evidence was not seized with the participation or collusion of, or in contemplation of use by, agents responsible for the proceeding in which the evidence was to be presented. 39

§ 598 Use of illegally obtained evidence to impeach credibility, generally

The Fourth Amendment does not require a trial court to exclude evidence obtained as a result of an unconstitutional seizure which is used to impeach the testimony of a defendant. 40 The rationale behind this rule is that while the government cannot make an affirmative use of evidence unlawfully obtained, a defendant should also not be able to turn the government's mistake to his own advantage and provide himself with a shield against contradicting his own untruths. 41 If a defendant exercises the right to testify on his own behalf, he assumes a reciprocal obligation to speak truthfully and accurately and may not turn the illegal method by which evidence in the government's possession was obtained to his own advantage, and provide himself with a shield against contradiction of his untruths. 42

The use of illegally seized evidence to impeach statements of the accused made in response to government cross-examination reasonably suggested by the accused's direct examination is proper. 43

Statements made by an accused to the police under circumstances rendering the statements inadmissible to establish the prosecution's case in chief, because the technical requirements established under Miranda 44 were not met, are admissible under federal constitutional standards for the purpose of impeaching the accused's credibility, where the statements are inconsistent with the accused's trial testimony bearing directly on the crimes charged, and the accused makes no claim that his statements to the police were coerced or involuntary, even though he may not have been given a Miranda warning. 45 It should be noted, however, that a number of states have refused to allow such use of statements taken in violation of Miranda, extending such protection to the accused on the basis of their respective state constitutions. 46

An involuntary statement cannot be used for any purpose, including impeaching the credibility of the defendant, 47 and a suspect's postarrest silence, after he received Miranda warnings, cannot be used to impeach his testimony. 48

Furthermore, the impeachment exception to the exclusionary rule does not extend to the prosecution's use of illegally obtained evidence to impeach the testimony of all defense witnesses, because such an expansion of the exception would frustrate, rather than further, the purposes underlying the exclusionary rule. 49

§ 599 --Sixth Amendment violation

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

After a defendant invokes the Sixth Amendment right to assistance of counsel, any waiver of Sixth Amendment rights given in a discussion initiated by police is presumed invalid, and evidence obtained pursuant to such a waiver is inadmissible in the prosecution's case in chief. 50 However, the content of such a discussion may be used to impeach a defendant's trial testimony, because the shield provided by the rule should not be perverted into a license to use perjury as a defense, free from the risk of confrontation with prior inconsistent utterances. 51

§ 600 Use of illegally obtained evidence with respect to subsequent offenses

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Illegally obtained evidence is generally admissible with respect to certain offenses committed after the illegal act of the government took place. 52 The deterrent purpose of the exclusionary rule would not be served by forbidding the government to use evidence obtained from an unlawful search and seizure to prove the entirely separate offense of perjury occurring after the illegal search and seizure and suppression of the evidence in state court. 53 In such circumstances, the purpose of the exclusionary rule is satisfied by the exclusion of the evidence from use in connection with the alleged crime committed prior to the illegal search and seizure, 54 while the government's interest in admitting the evidence of perjury is substantial 55 and no significant additional deterrent effect could be realized by suppressing the evidence at a trial of the search victim for a crime committed after the illegal search and with the knowledge that the illegal search had occurred. 56 Moreover, a holding that illegally obtained evidence should be suppressed in such circumstances would in effect give the victim of an illegal search a license to commit any new crimes he cared to, free from the concern that the illegally seized evidence might be used against him in prosecutions for these subsequent crimes. 57 The exclusionary rule also does not prohibit the use of illegally seized evidence to prove tax fraud allegedly committed some months after the seizure, since suppression of such evidence would not achieve substantial deterrence where it was unforeseeable to erring police officers that a suspect would later commit a separate crime, and in any event, any additional deterrent effect resulting from the exclusion of such evidence is outweighed by the necessity of preserving the self-reporting system of the tax structure. 58

However, the Second Circuit has rejected the view that the exclusionary rule is inapplicable with respect to perjury or other crimes committed after an illegal search, and has held that it was proper to suppress testimony as the fruit of an illegal search in a perjury prosecution for perjury which occurred after the illegal intrusion. 59 Additionally, illegally obtained evidence is suppressible where the subsequent perjury charge is tried in the same trial as other charges with respect to which the evidence is

2. Grounds for Suppressing Evidence [601-632]

a. Illegal Search and Seizure [601-608]

§ 601 Fourth Amendment exclusionary rule

View Entire Section Go to Parallel Reference Table Go to Supplement
--

Under the Fourth Amendment exclusionary rule, evidence obtained as a result of an illegal search or seizure is not admissible in proceedings against an accused 61 where a timely application is made to suppress or exclude the evidence. 62 This rule prohibits introduction into evidence of tangible materials seized during an unlawful search, testimony concerning knowledge acquired during an unlawful search, and derivative evidence, both tangible and testimonial, that is the product of the primary evidence, or that is otherwise acquired as an indirect result of the unlawful search, up to the point at which the connection with the unlawful search becomes so attenuated as to dissipate the taint. 63

Although the exclusionary rule rests upon the prohibition of unreasonable searches and seizures contained in the Fourth Amendment, 64 that Amendment contains no provision expressly precluding the use of evidence obtained in violation of its commands. 65 Through an examination of the origin and purpose of the Amendment, the Supreme Court has concluded that the use of fruits of a past unlawful search or seizure works no new Fourth Amendment wrong, and that the exclusionary rule operates as a judicially created remedy designed to safeguard Fourth Amendment rights generally through its deterrent effect, rather than as a personal constitutional right of the party aggrieved. 66 Thus, whether the exclusionary sanction is appropriately imposed in a particular case is an issue separate from the question whether the Fourth Amendment rights of the party seeking to invoke the rule were violated by police conduct. 67

◆ Observation: The fact that state law may require greater protection against searches and seizures than federal law is of no avail to a defendant in federal court, under prosecution for a federal crime, since the test to be applied by a federal court is one of federal law, neither enlarged by what one state court may have countenanced, nor diminished by what another may have colorably suppressed. 68

Practice Aids: Admissibility, in motor vehicle license suspension proceedings, of evidence obtained by unlawful search and seizure. 23 ALR5th 108.

Case authorities:

Pornographic videotape seized from defendant was inadmissible in evidence where it was seized pursuant to invalid anticipatory search warrant. United States v Ricciardelli (1993, CA1 Mass) 998 F2d 8, summary op at (CA1 Mass) 21 M.L.W. 2921, 14 R.I.L.W. 282.

There was no Fourth Amendment violation requiring suppression of documents and papers stolen from defendant lawyer's office and turned over to Assistant United States Attorney where documents and papers had already been searched by private parties so that no warrant was required for government agents to read them. United States v Knoll (1994, CA2 NY) 16 F3d 1313.

Police officer's stop of defendants' car was not unlawful as being pretextual where officer had probable cause to stop car for traffic offense of having no visible license plate, and stop was lawful regardless of whether traffic offense was only basis or merely one basis for stop; thus, firearm and evidence of drug trafficking found in search of car was admissible in evidence. United States v Ferguson (1993, CA6 Tenn) 8 F3d 385.

District Court's finding that encounter between drug enforcement agents and defendant in main terminal of railroad station after he had disembarked from train was consensual was not clearly erroneous, and thus evidence obtained during search of defendant's luggage was admissible; court was entitled to find agents' testimony about encounter more reliable than defendant's testimony. United States v Eddy (1993, CA7 Ill) 8 F3d 577.

Evidence seized from defendant's business was not inadmissible in evidence on alleged ground that defendant's consent to search his business was tainted by earlier Miranda violation during interrogation by drug enforcement agents where unwarned statement made during interrogation and consent to search were voluntary and, moreover, defendant signed consent-to- search form after having it explained to him and during search gave agents inculpatory evidence consisting of marijuana and drug- transaction records. United States v Wiley (1993, CA8 Iowa) 997 F2d 378, petition for certiorari filed (Sep 27, 1993).

Admission of evidence that was tainted by postal inspector's warrantless entry of residence in violation of Fourth Amendment was harmless beyond reasonable doubt where only tainted evidence admitted was testimony concerning events that occurred in bathroom of residence and untainted evidence against defendants was overwhelming. United States v Johnson (1993, CA8 Mo) 12 F3d 760, reh den (CA8) 1994 US App LEXIS 1702 and reh, en banc, den (CA8) 1994 US App LEXIS 3170.

Evidence seized from defendant's farm pursuant to search warrant was not inadmissible because of involvement of county undersheriff who had no official authority in county in which seizure occurred where undersheriff was accompanied by state special agents who were vested with powers and privileges of county sheriffs, one of whom applied for and executed warrant. United States v Occhipinti (1993, CA10 Kan) 998 F2d 791.

In DUI prosecution, trial court committed reversible error in denying defendant's motion to suppress evidence of blood sample forcibly taken from defendant by police following his arrest and after he had voluntarily given urine sample. State did not demonstrate need for blood sample warranting blood drawn without defendant's consent; police officer's opinion that blood was best test for detecting alcohol was not sufficient. Further, under Vehicle Code provision, person lawfully arrested for DUI has choice of submitting to blood, breath, or urine test, which reflects governmental acknowledgment that urine test is functional equivalent of blood test for evidentiary purposes with respect to presence of alcohol in person's system. People v Fiscalini (1991, 4th Dist) 228 Cal App 3d 1639, 279 Cal Rptr 682, 91 CDOS 2565, 91 Daily Journal DAR 4148.

Inspection of defendant's electrical meter by two agents of electrical utility who were searching for evidence that defendant was illegally diverting power did not rise to level requiring Fourth Amendment scrutiny, although utility agents contacted police and requested that officer accompany them to defendant's premises, and informed police of suspected drug activity, where agents had valid independent motive apart from detection or prevention of criminal activity, and police involvement was limited to positioning police officer one block away from inspection to be on hand in event of disturbance. United States v Cleaveland (1995, CA9 Or) 95 CDOS 329, 95 daily journal dar 583.

In DUI prosecution, trial court did not err in refusing to suppress results of blood alcohol tests where, although defendant had exercised statutory right to refuse test, police officer learned that defendant had prior DUI conviction and had good-faith belief that, as result, he could require blood test; no public policy would be served by excluding the evidence. Brockett v State (1991) 107 Nev 638, 817 P2d 1183.

The trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion for mistrial based on the admission into evidence of a pin and photograph previously suppressed by the trial court in pretrial motions on the ground that defendant's opening argument to the jury had reflected the trial court's suppression order where the suppression order was entered without prejudice to the State to show that the two items might be admissible under another theory of law; defendant was thus aware that the State might come forward with a legally acceptable basis for admission of the evidence; the State showed that the items were lawfully seized by an officer who entered defendant's trailer to effect an arrest; and defense counsel admitted that he did not tell the jury during the opening statement that the State would not offer either the pin or the photograph. Even if the admission of these items was error, defendant failed to present evidence of prejudice worthy of a mistrial considering the overwhelming evidence presented against him. State v Hill (1994) 116 NC App 573, 449 SE2d 573.

The trial court did not err in a prosecution arising from defendant hiring someone to kill her former husband and assault a woman whom he was dating and from an attack being carried out on the former husband by admitting telephone records which showed telephone calls from defendant to a coconspirator testifying against her. Assuming standing under the North Carolina Constitution, defendant failed in her burden of showing sufficient action attributable to the State which would implicate the constitutional protections against unreasonable search and seizure. The records were originally recorded in the usual course of Southern Bell's business and not under some State directive, there is no subpoena in the record, and defendant's argument that sufficient action attributable to the State exists because the State called a Southern Bell employee to testify about and produce the records at trial was rejected. State v Suggs (1995) 117 NC App 654, 453 SE2d 211.

The evidence gained in the execution of the search warrant of the accused's residence was properly suppressed, where the municipal court judge would not have issued the search warrant for the accused's residence had he not been provided with the evidence of the cocaine found in the accused's vehicle as a result of a violation of the Fourth Amendment rights of the accused. State v Carter, 69 OS3d 57, 630 NE2d 355.

In narcotics prosecution, trial court erred in suppressing all evidence seized from defendant's house on basis that information as to heat emanating from house, which information was used in affidavit supporting issuance of search warrant, had been improperly obtained (national guardsman used military thermal imaging device); court should have reevaluated affidavit without benefit of that information and, if remaining information demonstrated probable cause, search of house should have been upheld. State v Binner (1994) 128 Or App 639, 877 P2d 642.

Although independent source doctrine applied in state, evidence was nevertheless inadmissible where place of invasion was dwelling place, mode of entry was by battering ram in absence of exigent circumstances, and there was no reasonable explanation for battering down door before warrant arrived. Commonwealth v Mason (1993) 535 Pa 560, 637 A2d 251.

Trial court in prosecution for driving under influence of alcohol properly suppressed results of blood test on sample taken by hospital personnel over injured driver's refusal, since legislative intent was clear that automatic suspension of license for refusing test was intended sanction for refusal under implied-consent statutes that rendered involuntary test results inadmissible. State v Beyor (1993, Vt) 641 A2d 344.

A method of analyzing search and seizure problems is suggested by the following outline:

(1) Was there a search or seizure within the meaning of the Fourth Amendment?

–If yes, proceed to (2).

–If no, the evidence cannot be suppressed.

(2) Was a warrant required?

–If yes, proceed to (3).

–If no, proceed to (5).

(3) Was a warrant obtained?

–If yes, proceed to (4).

–If no, the evidence should be suppressed.

(4) Was the warrant valid?

–If yes, proceed to (6).

–If no, proceed to (5).

(5) Was there good-faith reliance on the warrant? 69

–If yes, proceed to (6).

–If no, the evidence should be suppressed.

(6) Was the search properly conducted?

–If yes, the evidence should not be suppressed.

–If no, the evidence should be suppressed. 70

Case authorities:

Defendant's motion to strike suppression hearing testimony of police officer because of government's failure to provide tape recordings of dispatcher's office on date of arrest was legally insufficient where there were no allegations that recordings were actually made, that recordings were destroyed by police department and that contents of recording would have been materially favorable to defendants, since routine administrative destruction of potentially exculpatory evidence does not violate constitution. United States v Florack (1994, WD NY) 155 FRD 49.

§ 603 Good-faith exception to exclusionary rule

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

The Supreme Court has modified the Fourth Amendment exclusionary rule so as not to bar the use, in the prosecution's case in chief, of evidence obtained by officers acting in reasonable reliance on a search warrant issued by a detached and neutral magistrate which ultimately is found to be defective. 71 Although the term "good faith" does not fully capture the objective nature of the inquiry required for application of this exception, it is nevertheless known as the "good-faith exception" as a shorthand description. 72 The terms "reasonable reliance," "objective good-faith," and "objectively reasonable" are also used to refer to the conduct required of officers to whom the exception applies. 73

A number of state courts have declined to apply the good-faith exception to the exclusionary rule, finding in their respective criminal statutes 74 or state constitutions 75 grounds for excluding the tainted evidence. While the federal Constitution establishes certain minimum levels of protection which are equally applicable to the analogous state constitutional provisions, each state has the power to provide broader standards, and go beyond the minimum floor which is established by the federal Constitution. 76

The principal rationale for the good-faith exception is that the suppression of evidence obtained in objectively reasonable reliance on a subsequently invalidated search warrant would produce only marginal or nonexistent benefits which cannot justify the substantial cost of exclusion. 77 Application of the exclusionary rule is properly restricted to situations in which its remedial purpose is effectively advanced. 78 Exclusion of evidence will not deter police misconduct where an officer acting with objective good faith has obtained a search warrant from a judge or magistrate, and has acted within its scope. 79 In most such cases, there is no police illegality and thus nothing to deter. In the ordinary case, an officer cannot be expected to question the magistrate's probable cause determination or judgment that the form of the warrant is technically sufficient. 80 Similarly, suppressing evidence because a judge failed to make all the necessary clerical corrections with respect to a warrant, despite the judge's assurances that such changes would be made, will not serve the deterrent function of the exclusionary rule, 81 which is not designed to punish the errors of judges and magistrates, and moreover, there is no basis for believing that exclusion of evidence seized pursuant to a warrant would have a significant deterrent effect on judges or magistrates. 82

The exception has been held to apply to military jurisprudence, 83 although it has also been observed that because a commander is not subject to some of the requirements imposed on magistrates, it should not be automatically assumed that the good-faith exception applies to a commander's authorization of a search. 84

§ 603 ----Good-faith exception to exclusionary rule [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Suppression of evidence seized in violation of the Federal Constitution's Fourth Amendment is not required by the exclusionary rule where the evidence was seized incident to an arrest made on the basis of erroneous information—a computer check of a driver stopped for a routine traffic violation revealed the existence of an outstanding misdemeanor warrant for the driver's arrest, when in fact the warrant had been quashed 2 weeks earlier—which in turn resulted from a clerical error of court employees; application of the exclusionary rule is not warranted where it does not result in appreciable deterrence of future violations of Fourth Amendment rights, and the exclusion of evidence at trial would not sufficiently deter future clerical errors of court employees so as to warrant the imposition of such a severe sanction where (1) the exclusionary rule was historically designed as a means of deterring police misconduct, not mistakes by court employees, (2) no evidence has been presented to show that court employees are inclined to ignore or subvert the Fourth Amendment or that lawlessness among those actors requires application of the extreme sanction of exclusion, and (3) there is no basis for believing that application of the exclusionary rule in these circumstances will have a significant effect on court employees responsible for informing the police that a warrant has been quashed, since court clerks are not adjuncts to the law enforcement team engaged in ferreting out crime, and thus have no stake in the outcome of a particular criminal prosecution. (Stevens, J., dissented from this holding.) Arizona v Evans (1995, US) 131 L Ed 2d 34, 115 S Ct 1185, 95 CDOS 1509, 95 Daily Journal DAR 2671.

Even if affidavit supporting warrant to search defendant's residence was defective, good-faith exception to exclusionary rule applied where, based upon explosive devices having been discovered in residence after police officers' warrantless entry in response to report of possible burglary in progress, officers, bomb squad, and ATF agents called in by officers were reasonably under impression that they were responding to exigent circumstances and thus reasonably and in good faith relied on warrant in seizing suspicious piece of white PVC pipe that was later determined to be silencer. United States v Johnson (1993, CA6 Tenn) 9 F3d 506.

Good-faith exception to exclusionary rule applied to OSHA's full- scope inspection of tank and pressure vessel manufacturer's plant based on employee's complaint about unsafe conditions in plant where, although OSHA instruction allowing Secretary of Labor to conduct full- scope inspection authorized by single warrant obtained only on basis of employee complaint was invalid, Secretary obtained decisions from both magistrate and District Court upholding warrant and decision from Court of Appeals denying manufacture's application for stay of District Court's order affirming magistrate's denial of manufacture's motion to quash warrant so that it could be said that Secretary relied in objectively good faith on facially valid warrant; for same reason, good-faith exception applied so as to permit full-scope inspection that involved both safety and health components even though warrant only authorized comprehensive safety inspection. Trinity Indus. v OSHRC (1994, CA6) 16 F3d 1455, 16 BNA OSHC 1609, 1994 CCH OSHD ¶ 30369, 1994 FED App. 65P.

Good-faith exception to exclusionary rule applied to search of defendant's trailer house pursuant to warrant where affidavit supporting warrant was not so lacking in evidence of probable cause as to render any reliance on warrant objectively unreasonable; affidavit contained information that drugs were found in defendant's car, that large amount of cash was found on his person at time of his arrest for driving on suspended driver's license, and that drugs, drug paraphernalia, and guns were found in prior search of trailer house. United States v Riedesel (1993, CA8 Iowa) 987 F2d 1383.

Good-faith exception to exclusionary rule applied to search of defendant's home pursuant to warrant where, regardless of whether there was probable cause to issue warrant, it was objectively reasonable for detective, who filed affidavit in support of warrant, to conclude that there was probable cause since he knew that informant had been seen leaving home and that informant had provided detective with description of drug activities taking place in home. United States v Chambers (1993, CA8 Mo) 987 F2d 1331.

District Court did not err in finding that state officers acted in good faith in relying on state warrant to arrest defendant even though warrant did not comport with Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, and hence court did not err in declining to apply exclusionary rule, where officers' conduct conformed with state law and practice and warrant was facially valid; nor was it unreasonable for federal Secret Service agent to rely on warrant without investigating its validity under Federal Rules. United States v Gobey (1993, CA10 Colo) 12 F3d 964, corrected (CA10) slip op.

Suppression of evidence was not required, despite fact that testimony which supported search warrant contained errors, and federal magistrate's proceeding contained flaw which may have controlled its outcome, where errors were not made intentionally or with reckless disregard for the truth. State v Mechtel (1993) 176 Wis 2d 87, 499 NW2d 662.

§ 605 --Objective reasonableness as test of good faith

In determining whether the exclusionary rule should be applied to exclude evidence obtained pursuant to a warrant, a showing of objectively reasonable good faith on the part of the police officers will ordinarily redeem honest errors and prevent the application of the exclusionary rule. 87

Under the good-faith exception to the exclusionary rule, once the defendants have convinced the court that probable cause for the granting of a search warrant was lacking, the government bears the burden of demonstrating that the law enforcement officers' reliance on the warrant satisfied the good-faith exception. 88 There is an objectively reasonable basis for police officers' mistaken belief that a warrant is valid where the officers have taken every step that could reasonably be expected of them, having prepared an affidavit which was reviewed and approved by a District Attorney, presented that affidavit to a neutral judge who concluded that the affidavit established probable cause, and informed the officers that he would authorize the search as requested, having been told by the judge that necessary changes in the form would be made, having observed the judge make changes, and having received the warrant and the affidavit. 89 Where a warrant is held to be invalid due to a simple error in the determination of probable cause, the evidence should be suppressed only if the supporting affidavit was so lacking in indicia of probable cause as to render official belief in its existence entirely unreasonable. 90 The proper test is not what the District Court judge would have done if the affidavit had been presented to that judge, or even what most other magistrates might have done if presented with the affidavit, but whether it was entirely unreasonable for the officers to accept the magistrate's belief that, based on the affidavit, there was probable cause for the search. 91 It must also be remembered that the knowledge and understanding on the part of law enforcement officers and their appreciation of constitutional intricacies are not to be judged by the standards applicable to lawyers. 92 Where evidence is sufficient to create disagreement among thoughtful and competent judges as to the existence of probable cause, it cannot be said that police officers who provide a truthful affidavit to a neutral magistrate who then issues a warrant are not objectively reasonable in believing that they have probable cause. 93 An officer's expert opinion, being an important factor to be considered by a judge reviewing a warrant application, should also be considered as a factor contributing to objective good faith. 94

§ 606 --Warrantless search in reliance on statute

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

A good-faith exception to the Fourth Amendment exclusionary rule also applies when an officer undertakes an objectively reasonable warrantless administrative search in reliance on the constitutionality of a statute which is subsequently declared unconstitutional. 95 The application of the exclusionary rule in such a case would not deter future Fourth Amendment violations by an officer who has simply fulfilled his responsibility to enforce the statute as written. Unless the statute is clearly unconstitutional, the officer cannot be expected to question the judgment of the legislature that passed the law. Not only would application of the rule have no deterrent effect on police officers, it would have no significant deterrent effect on legislatures enacting such statutes. 96

However, a statute cannot support objectively reasonable reliance if, in passing the statute, the legislature wholly abandoned its responsibility to enact constitutional law; nor can a law enforcement officer be said to have acted in good-faith reliance upon a statute if its provisions are such that a reasonable officer should have known that the statute was unconstitutional. 97

Despite the good-faith exception, evidence seized pursuant to a defective warrant may still be suppressed if one of four criteria is met:

- (1) a magistrate issued the warrant in reliance on a deliberately or recklessly false affidavit;
- (2) the magistrate abandoned the judicial role and failed to perform a neutral and detached function;
- (3) the warrant was based on an affidavit so lacking in indicia of probable cause as to render official belief in the existence of probable cause entirely unreasonable; or
- (4) the warrant was so facially deficient that it failed to particularize the place to be searched or the things to be seized. 98

§ 608 Silver platter doctrine

View Entire Section

The so-called "silver platter" doctrine, under which evidence turned over to federal officials by state officials would not be suppressed, even though it was obtained by means of an illegal search, 99 has been repudiated by the Supreme Court. 1 Articles obtained as a result of an unreasonable search and seizure by state officers may not be introduced into evidence against a defendant over his timely objection in a federal criminal trial, even though the search was conducted without the involvement of federal officers. 2 In addition, evidence obtained by means of an illegal search conducted by state officers with federal participation, 3 or by means of an illegal search conducted solely by state officers for the sole purpose of aiding the United States in the enforcement of its laws, 4 is not admissible in a prosecution for a federal offense in the federal courts, where a timely objection has been made. Thus, if federal and state officers both participate in a search, but the search warrant obtained by state authorities was not issued by a judge of a state court of record, as required by FR Crim P 41(a), 5 or did not specify the property which the federal officers wished to seize, 6 the evidence may not be used in a federal prosecution.

The question whether evidence obtained by state officers, or pursuant to a state search warrant, was obtained by means of an unreasonable search and seizure, and is therefore inadmissible in a federal prosecution, is to be judged under federal standards. 7

b. Illegal Wiretapping and Electronic Surveillance [609-625]

(1). General Principles [609-611]

§ 609 Title III of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Title III of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act ⁸ is a comprehensive scheme for the regulation of wiretapping and electronic surveillance. ⁹ This statute implements the holdings in several Supreme Court cases that the interception of an oral or wire conversation constitutes a search and seizure within the meaning of the Fourth Amendment. ¹⁰ No part of the contents of an intercepted wire or oral communication and no evidence derived therefrom may be received in evidence in specified proceedings ¹¹ if disclosure of that information is in violation of Title III. ¹²

◆ Caution: Although Title III has been amended to protect against the unauthorized interception of electronic communications, ¹³ the statutory exclusionary rule of Title III ¹⁴ applies only to the interception of wire or oral communications and not to the interception of electronic communications. The only judicial remedies and sanctions for nonconstitutional violations of Title III involving electronic communications are those described in Title III with respect to the interception of electronic communications. ¹⁵

◆ Observation: One of the goals of Title III was to define on a uniform basis the circumstances and conditions under which the interception of wire or oral communications may be authorized. States were authorized to enact similar legislation, which could be more restrictive but not more permissive than Title III. Over thirty states and the District of Columbia have enacted such legislation. ¹⁶

§ 610 Applicability of exclusionary rule in particular proceedings and courts

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

No part of the contents of an intercepted wire or oral communication, and no evidence derived therefrom may be received in evidence in any trial, hearing, or other proceeding in or before any court, grand jury, department, officer, agency, regulatory body, legislative committee, or other authority of the United States, a state, or a political subdivision thereof, if the disclosure of that information would be in violation of Title III of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act. 17 Similarly, the federal wiretap statute 18 gives any aggrieved person in any trial, hearing, or proceeding in or before any court, department, officer, agency, regulatory body, or other authority of the United States, a state, or a political subdivision thereof, the right to move to suppress the contents of any intercepted wire or oral communication on specified grounds. 19 The statutory exclusionary rule applies in both federal and state proceedings and in civil as well as criminal proceedings. 20 It also applies in administrative hearings, such as probation revocation proceedings, 21 even though the general exclusionary rule does not apply in these proceedings. 22

§ 611 --Grand jury proceedings

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

The use of illegally intercepted evidence before any grand jury is prohibited, ²³ but the federal statute governing the procedure for interception of wire, oral, or electronic communications ²⁴ does not specifically give an aggrieved person the right to move before a grand jury to suppress the contents of an intercepted wire or oral communication. ²⁵ The legislative history indicates that since no person is a party to a grand jury proceeding, the making of a motion to suppress in the context of a grand jury proceeding itself is not envisioned. ²⁶

Although a prospective defendant or a witness does not have standing to bring a suppression motion in a grand jury proceeding before refusing to answer questions based upon information gained through unlawful surveillance, this does not mean that the prohibition against the use of unlawfully intercepted wire or oral communications in grand jury proceedings is not to be enforced. If a witness before a grand jury refuses to answer a question on the ground that it was based on evidence derived from an unauthorized wiretap, the federal statute barring use of improperly intercepted wire or oral communications provides a defense against an ensuing contempt charge. ²⁷

Where illegally obtained evidence is used before a grand jury, dismissal of the grand jury's indictment is warranted only where the prosecutor's misconduct amounts to serious and blatant misconduct which distorts the integrity of the judicial process. ²⁸ Thus, dismissal of an indictment is not warranted where the government was acting in accord with a reasonable, if incorrect, construction of the law, according to which use of the evidence would have been legal. ²⁹

(2). Exceptions [612-615]

§ 612 Creation by statute or judicial decision

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Courts are not authorized to create exceptions to the federal statute barring use of improperly intercepted wire or oral communications 30 in the same manner as they may develop exceptions to the Fourth Amendment exclusionary rule, as Congress carefully considered which aspects of the Fourth Amendment exclusionary rule would and would not be incorporated into the statute. 31 Protection of privacy was the dominant concern of Congress when it enacted the statute, whereas the primary purpose of the Fourth Amendment exclusionary rule is the deterrence of unreasonable searches and seizures in violation of the Fourth Amendment. 32 Accordingly, the federal statute barring use of improperly intercepted wire or oral communications is not to be read to include an exception permitting the use of illegally intercepted communications in perjury prosecutions. 33

§ 613 Interception by private party; interspousal interception

View Entire Section

The exclusionary rule concerning interception of wire or oral communications applies to the introduction in evidence of an illegally intercepted communication by an innocent recipient of the communication. 34 The protection of privacy is an overriding Congressional concern behind Title III of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act, and an invasion of privacy is compounded by the disclosure of a communication, even if the disclosing party is merely the innocent recipient of the communication illegally intercepted by another. 35 Thus, the government may be barred from use of a recording made in violation of Title III even if the government was the innocent recipient, rather than the guilty interceptor, of the communication. 36 However, evidence illegally recorded by private parties is admissible where used against the persons who made the tapes and against coconspirators of those persons. 37

While state statutes or constitutional provisions relating to the right of privacy may result in the suppression in state civil cases of wiretap evidence obtained by a private individual, 38 such evidence has been found admissible where a plaintiff in a marital dispute accuses his or her spouse of using tapes of illegally intercepted conversations for the purpose of blackmail. 39 Some courts also enforce an interspousal rule, which permits the admission of tape recordings made by one spouse of conversations between the other spouse and a third party. 40

◆ Observation: Under some of these circumstances, it may be possible to bring federal criminal charges 41 or a civil action for damages 42 against a private party who intercepts, discloses, or uses an illegally intercepted communication.

It is not unlawful for a person acting under color of law to intercept a wire, oral, or electronic communication, where such person is a party to the communication or one of the parties to the communication has given prior consent to such interception. 43 It is also not unlawful for a person not acting under color of law to intercept a wire or oral communication, where such person is a party to the communication or where one of the parties to the communication has given prior consent to such interception, unless the communication is intercepted for the purpose of committing a criminal or tortious act. 44 Accordingly, the wiretap suppression statute 45 does not preclude the use of an intercepted communication when one of the parties has consented to the interception. 46 No official approval is required before a government agent may overhear and record conversations with the consent of one of the parties to the conversation, and such evidence may be admitted in a criminal trial. 47 Where conversations are overheard or recorded by government agents with the consent of one of the conversants, the tapes may be used as evidence in a federal criminal prosecution even though the warrantless interception of the conversation is in violation of state law. 48

§ 615 Impeachment

View Entire Section Go to Parallel Reference Table

In accord with the general rule that illegally obtained evidence may be used for impeachment purposes, 49 tape recordings obtained by means of an illegal wiretap are admissible as evidence in a criminal trial for impeachment purposes, and are not subject to the statutory 50 exclusionary rule. 51 This result is based on statements in the Senate Report that the wiretap suppression statute 52 is not intended to enlarge the scope of the suppression rule beyond then existing search and seizure law, including the law relating to use of improperly obtained evidence for impeachment purposes. 53 However, although the government may use wiretap evidence to impeach a defendant, a defendant charged with illegal wiretapping is precluded from using evidence illegally obtained by wiretapping to impeach a government witness. 54

(3). Grounds for Suppression [616-625]

§ 616 Generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Any aggrieved party in a specified proceeding 55 may move to suppress the contents of any wire or oral communication intercepted pursuant to Title III of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act, or evidence derived therefrom, 56 on the grounds that:

- (1) the communication was unlawfully intercepted; 57
- (2) the order of authorization or approval under which it was intercepted is insufficient on its face; 58 or
- (3) the interception was not made in conformity with the order of authorization or approval. 59

◆ Observation: It can be noted that the last two grounds 60 permit suppression if specific violations of the procedural requisites for properly conducting an interception are committed, while the first 61 is a fairly general ground for suppression. Does the general ground for suppression incorporate all violations of Title III, thereby rendering the latter grounds surplusage? The Supreme Court has held that ground (i) clearly includes some constitutional violations, such as lack of probable cause, but is not limited to constitutional violations, and also includes some failures to observe the requirements under Title III. 62

Suppression is required on the basis that the communication was unlawfully intercepted where there is a failure to satisfy any of the statutory requirements that directly and substantially implement the congressional intention to limit the use of interception procedures to those situations clearly calling for the employment of this extraordinary investigative device. 63 Furthermore, not every failure to comply fully with any requirement of Title III renders the interception of wire or oral communications unlawful. 64 This distinction is illustrated in the case of an improperly authorized application for an interception order, discussed in the following section.

◆ Caution: The remedies and sanctions described in Title III with respect to the interception of electronic communications are the only judicial remedies and sanctions for nonconstitutional violations of Title III involving such communications. 65

◆ Comment: It has been suggested by one authority 66 that the following provisions of Title III are central, and that a violation of these provisions should lead to suppression of the resulting evidence. These provisions include the requirement that:

- (1) a designated official authorize the application for an interception order; 67
- (2) evidence of a designated offense be submitted with the application for an interception order; 68
- (3) an application be based on probable cause; 69
- (4) a statement be made as to whether other investigative procedures have been tried and failed, or why they reasonably appear to be unlikely to succeed if tried, or appear to be too dangerous; 70
- (5) an interception order be limited to a 30-day period; 71 and
- (6) the interception terminate upon the attainment of the authorized objective. 72

Use of wiretap information acquired by federal officers in violation of state law, but in compliance with 18 USCS § 2511, does not breach federal law, and therefore, there is no basis for excluding the information. 73

§ 617 Improperly authorized application for wiretap order

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

While the Attorney General is permitted to specially designate Assistant Attorneys General to authorize wiretap applications, 74 problems have arisen where an application for a wiretapping authorization falsely stated that it was approved by the properly designated Assistant Attorney General. 75 It has been held that the above provision for preapplication approval by a designated senior official in the Department of Justice is intended to play a central role in the statutory scheme of Title III, and that suppression must follow when it is shown that this statutory requirement has been ignored, such as where subordinates in the Justice Department signed the name of the Attorney General or a designated Assistant Attorney General to the authorization request. 76 But where it appears that the Attorney General personally approved the application for a wiretap order, evidence secured as a result of that interception need not be suppressed, even though the papers filed with the court falsely indicated that the designated Assistant Attorney General had approved the request. 77

§ 618 Facial invalidity of order

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

A specified ground for moving to suppress the contents of a wire or oral communication intercepted pursuant to Title III of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act is that the order of authorization or approval under which a communication was intercepted was insufficient on its face. 78 An error which may render a wiretapping order invalid under this provision is a failure by the judge to sign the wiretapping order. 79 Such an error is not a mere clerical error, which can be corrected nunc pro tunc, but indicates that the wiretap order was never approved by the judge, as required by statute. 80 However, it should be noted that if a wiretap order appears complete on its face, and states that the application for the order was authorized by a designated Assistant Attorney General, the order is not invalid on its face, even if it later appears that the designated Assistant Attorney General did not sign the authorization. 81 Under such circumstances, suppression is only available on the ground of unlawful interception if this violation frustrates one of the statutory requirements that directly and substantially implements the Congressional intention to limit the use of wiretapping. 82 Thus, the misidentification of the authorizing official, which can be corrected by a subsequent affidavit, assuming that a proper official did authorize the application, is only a technical defect, and does not render the wiretap order insufficient on its face. 83

Suppression of evidence need not follow from——the failure of an application for an extension to contain an explanation of the failure to obtain results, 84 where the application is not founded solely on a renewal of initial allegations, but contains additional allegations and information forming an ample basis for a probable cause finding. 85

—a failure to assert that all other less intrusive investigative techniques were unlikely to succeed, 86 where the affidavit describes the standard techniques that have been tried and facts demonstrating why they are no longer effective, even if every other possible means of investigation has not been exhausted. 87

—a failure to identify the identity of the targets. 88 And if a judge weighs the statutory factors, and finds that an interception order should be issued, the mere fact that additional parties may be overheard, but are not named in the application, does not invalidate the warrant and need not lead to the suppression of evidence. 89

—a failure to specify the period during which interceptions are authorized, 90 such as where a judge failed to date the order, if the clerical error can be corrected by the clerk stamping the date on the order the same day the judge entered it. 91 But if it appears that the date of the entry of the interception order cannot be ascertained, and the order, by its own terms, is for an indefinite duration, evidence obtained thereunder must be suppressed. 92

—the omission of a statement that the interception shall be executed as soon as practicable, 93 so long as the warrant was in fact executed quickly. 94

—a failure to include a minimization clause, 95 where the supporting affidavits evidenced an actual knowledge of the minimization requirement and an agreement by the authorities to abide by it. 96

—a failure to sign an affidavit in support of an application for an interception order, where the agent swore to the truth of the contents of the affidavit before the issuing judge. 97

It has been noted that several state courts have insisted on strict compliance with the statutory requirements of Title III, 98 and have invalidated warrants omitting several of the clauses required by the federal wiretap statute, even where federal courts would not have invalidated the warrant for failure to include a particular clause, and even where the policies underlying those clauses were actually followed by the investigators. 99

§ 619 Failure to comply with order, generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Evidence obtained through the interception of wire or oral communications may be suppressed on the ground that the interception was not made in conformity with the order of authorization or approval. 1 While it has been indicated that suppression is not required if there has been substantial compliance with the order and no prejudice to the defendant is shown, 2 it has also been indicated that the good-faith efforts and worthy intentions of the police, a prosecutor's lack of experience and need for secretarial assistance, or a desire to delay requesting an amendment to the wiretap order after an inadvertent unauthorized interception was discovered, are extraneous considerations which will not prevent suppression. 3 If, while conducting a wiretap pursuant to a court order authorizing the interception of a named party's conversations, the police discover that they have inadvertently also intercepted the conversations of a second party whose voice was similar to that of the named party, the conversations of the second party which were intercepted after the date the police discovered the error, may not be admitted into evidence where the police failed to seek an amendment of the wiretapping order. 4

§ 620 --Failure to minimize

Title III of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act provides that every interception order, and extension thereof, must contain a provision that the interception be conducted in such a way as to minimize the interception of wire, oral, or electronic communications not otherwise subject to interception under the Act. 5

A suppression motion alleging that there was insufficient minimization of conversation surveillance may be overruled where the movant fails to establish a prima facie pattern of interception of innocent conversations. 6

There has been some disagreement over whether all evidence obtained by interception of wire or oral conversations should be suppressed if the minimization requirements have not been met, or whether only the innocent conversations should be suppressed. 7 One court has said that evidence directly within the ambit of a lawful interception order should not be suppressed because the officers, while awaiting the incriminating evidence, also gathered some extraneous conversations. Thus, the nonincriminating evidence should be suppressed but the conversations which the warrant contemplated overhearing should be admitted into evidence. 8 Under this theory, if the conversations of innocent parties were overheard, those parties should bring a civil action, if they desire redress. 9 On the other hand, another court has observed that if only innocent calls were suppressed, the government could intercept every conversation during the entire period of the wiretap with nothing to lose by doing so, since it would obviously only use at trial those conversations which have incriminating value anyway. 10 Thus, it has been held that a failure by the government to comply with the minimization requirement should require the suppression of all of the communications which were intercepted. 11 The third view tends to reconcile these two lines of authority by distinguishing between blatant violations of the statute, in which no attempt of minimization is made, and cases in which minimization is attempted, but the court concludes that the efforts were inadequate; in the former case, all wiretap evidence should be suppressed, while in the latter case, partial suppression is warranted. 12

However, considerations are different if the police do not violate the general minimization requirement, but violate a special minimization provision of an interception order, such as an order prohibiting the interception of any conversations after a certain hour. 13 In such a case, violations are sufficiently deterred if only the conversations which were seized in violation of the time limitations in the interception order are suppressed. 14

An interception order may require reports to be made to the judge who issued the order showing what progress has been made toward the achievement of the authorized objective and the need for continued interception, such reports to be made at such intervals as the judge may require. 15 While progress reports should be timely filed in accordance with the judge's order, the sanction for failure to do so is not the automatic suppression of the tapes. 16 Instead, the judge has the discretion to authorize the proper sanction. 17 A defendant may not successfully move for suppression in the absence of a showing of express prejudice. 18

The contents of any wire, oral, or electronic communication intercepted by any means authorized by Title III of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act shall, if possible, be recorded on tape, wire, or other comparable device. 19 A failure to record, though admittedly a violation of Title III, need not lead to suppression and the reversal of a conviction, since the recording requirement is not central to preserving the right of privacy. 20

§ 622 ----Recording of intercepted communications [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Suppression of wiretap evidence was improper in prosecution of former police officer for accepting bribes to overlook illegal lottery operation where statute allowed interception of wire or oral communication involving "suspected criminal activities" when one party had given prior consent; informant had consented to wiretap and had worn body wire during conversations with defendant, and defendant made incriminating statements with respect to his unlawful involvement with lottery operation in conversations with informant. Commonwealth v Taylor (1993, Pa Super) 622 A2d 329.

Police captain, involuntarily retired for racist remarks made during telephone conversation with subordinate, was not entitled to suppress evidence of recorded conversation on basis of statute sanctioning conduct of intercepting oral communications, where all incoming calls to headquarters were regularly monitored and recorded and, as 25- year veteran, defendant knew that conversations were recorded and sometimes transcribed, subordinate knew this, and this knowledge constituted consent of at least one party. Further, law enforcement agencies can intercept and record in-coming telephone calls without consent. § 623 Failure to comply with sealing requirements

View Entire Section

Immediately upon the expiration of an interception order (or extensions of it), the recordings of the intercepted wire, oral, or electronic communications must be made available to the judge issuing the order and must be sealed under his or her directions. 21 When there has been a violation of the sealing requirement, exclusion of the evidence is justified on the ground that a defendant need not confront inaccurate reproductions of his own conversations. 22 In fact, the Supreme Court has held that delay in sealing recordings derived from electronic surveillance requires suppression of the recordings, unless the government is able to give a satisfactory explanation at the suppression hearing as to why the delay should be deemed excusable. 23

§ 623 ----Failure to comply with sealing requirements [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Delay in sealing tapes within two to five day range did not merit suppression, where government explained that it had miscalculated expiration date and had not thought it necessary to contact judge at home in order to seal tapes over weekend. United States v Pitera (1993, CA2 NY) 5 F3d 624, cert den (US) 62 USLW 3552.

District court did not err by not suppressing video and audio tapes of two dinners, even though they were not sealed immediately after they were made, where court concluded that first order governing surveillance activities extended period for ten days and second order extended period for thirty days, and although one tape was not sealed until two days after extended period, tape was timely sealed, where government provided satisfactory explanation, defendant did not object to delay, and court could discern no prejudice. United States v Blandford (1994, CA6 Ky) 33 F3d 685, 1994 FED App 312P, reh, en banc, den (CA6 Ky) 1994 US App LEXIS 34101 and (criticized by United States v Hairston (CA4 NC) 1995 US App LEXIS 1995).

Tape recordings which had been unsealed for use in another trial and resealed by an FBI agent, but not by judicial order, may be admissible, since the judicial seal was absent due to a good faith misunderstanding of the statutory requirements; however, an evidentiary hearing regarding the chain of custody was required in the event of a new trial. United States v Long (CA2 NY) 917 F2d 691, 135 BNA LRRM 2812, 31 Fed Rules Evid Serv 526.

Recordings of intercepted wire, oral, or electronic communications may not be destroyed except upon an order of the judge who issued or denied the interception order, and that in any event, the tapes must be kept for 10 years. 24 The purposes of this statute are to insure adequate disclosure of the contents of intercepted communications, 25 in order to enable the aggrieved party to meet his initial burden to demonstrate that there has been illegal wiretapping. 26 Therefore, if the tape recordings of intercepted conversations have been destroyed, the government is at least obligated to provide accurate transcripts of the conversations, 27 or proof that its information was not tainted by illegal wiretapping, but had an independent source. 28

The supervising judge must cause notice of the application for an intercept order, the order permitting or disallowing the interception, and the fact that wire, oral, or electronic communications were or were not intercepted to be served on the persons named in the application and such other persons that the judge determines, in his discretion, ought to be served in the interest of justice. 29

A postinterception failure to serve the notice and inventory cannot result in retroactively rendering the interception unlawful. 30 Even if notice was not given until after the 90-day statutory deadline, suppression of the evidence is not required if the defendant fails to show actual prejudice caused by the delay. 31

c. Improper Identification Evidence [626-630]

§ 626 Constitutional implications, generally

Apart from any right-to-counsel claim, a confrontation may be so unnecessarily suggestive and conducive to irreparable mistaken identification that an accused would thereby be denied due process of law. 32

Since no lineup or showup can be entirely free from suggestion, the presence of possibly prejudicial factors in a pretrial identification procedure will not necessarily result in the court voiding its results. 33 The validity of a claimed violation of due process depends on the totality of the circumstances surrounding the confrontation. 34

The admissibility of identification evidence is governed by a two-step analysis: first, whether the identification procedure was impermissibly suggestive, 35 and second, whether such suggestiveness created a substantial likelihood of irreparable misidentification. 36 The defendant's protection against the obvious suggestiveness in any courtroom identification confrontation is his right to cross-examination. 37

◆ Observation: The two-step test used to determine admissibility of identification evidence reflects the fact that not all impermissibly suggestive confrontations give rise to a substantial likelihood of irreparable misidentification. 38

In a prosecution of multiple defendants for drug importation and other related conspiracies, the trial court properly admitted testimony by a witness of 2 previous photographic identifications the witness had made of one of the defendants, though the witness was unable to identify the defendant at trial. Even though the prior identification procedure had been unnecessarily suggestive, it had been attended by sufficient indicia of reliability, including the fact that the witness had consistently picked the defendant's photograph from 2 different photograph books on 3 separate occasions, the fact that the witness had given an accurate description of the defendant and had been certain of the identification, and the fact that the witness had observed the defendant for one-half hour during one meeting as well as on other occasions. United States v Di Tommaso (CA2 NY) 817 F2d 201, 22 Fed Rules Evid Serv 1595.

§ 627 --Reliability as determining factor

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Because identification evidence derived from an unnecessarily suggestive source need not be excluded if the totality of the circumstances indicates its reliability, 39 it has been said that the reliability of identification evidence is the linchpin in determining its admissibility. 40 So long as an identification is reliable, its exclusion is not constitutionally mandated. 41

The passage of time between the crime charged and the in-court confrontation with the witnesses generally does not render the in-court identifications so unreliable as to be inadmissible. Rather, the passage of time is a proper item for cross-examination and closing argument, and a circumstance for the jury to consider in assessing the weight to be given the identification testimony. 42 A three to four-month delay between the crime and the identification does not render the identification inherently unreliable. 43

A criminal defendant who concedes that he was apprehended while committing a crime and is guilty as charged, may not object to the admission of eyewitness identifications made by witnesses at trial, since the defendant has, in effect, conceded that the identifications are reliable. 44

For both in-court and out-of-court identifications, 45 there are five factors to consider in evaluating the reliability of an identification: the opportunity of the witness to view the criminal at the time of the crime; the witness' degree of attention; the accuracy of the witness' prior description of the criminal; the level of certainty demonstrated by the witness at the confrontation; and the length of time between the crime and the confrontation. 46

The following factors suggested by the Supreme Court 47 in determining the totality of the circumstances should be kept in mind by the attorney arguing that the identification was a result of suggestive police procedures rather than observation at the scene:

- The prior opportunity to observe the alleged criminal act
- The existence of any discrepancy between any prelineup description and the defendant's actual description
- Any identification of another person prior to the lineup
- The identification by picture of the defendant prior to lineup
- Failure to identify the defendant on a prior occasion
- The lapse of time between the alleged act and the lineup identification
- Whether the witness knew the defendant

The trial court did not err by finding that a robbery victim's in- court identification of defendant was based upon what he observed the night of the robbery at a bank teller machine and was of independent origin from a pretrial photographic identification where the victim testified that he was face to face with defendant for ten minutes in a well-lighted area with nothing concealing defendant's facial features and that his corrected vision is 20\20, and a detective testified that the victim's initial description of defendant after the robbery was "pretty close" to his actual appearance and that defendant immediately picked defendant's picture at the photographic lineup and seemed positive about his identification. State v Lindsey (1995) 118 NC App 549, 455 SE2d 909.

§ 628 Suggestive lineup

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

The manner of conducting a police lineup may be so unnecessarily suggestive and conducive to an irreparably mistaken identification as to constitute a violation of the Due Process Clause. 48 In order to minimize the dangers inherent in the lineup procedure, the Supreme Court has affirmed the right of suspects to have the services of counsel during a lineup, 49 and the fact that counsel was not present when a suspect was placed in a lineup is a ground for suppressing identification evidence. 50 If the circumstances attending a lineup are suggestive or unfair, this fact also renders the evidence of any subsequent identification inadmissible; however, the effect of the totality of the circumstances must be determined before such evidence is ruled inadmissible. 51

Some facts which may make a lineup unduly suggestive are: a prior confrontation between the defendant and the witness, the use of two lineups in which the defendant was the only common participant, a contrast in height between the defendant and other participants in the lineup, and the dressing of the defendant in clothes similar to that worn by the perpetrator of the crime. 52 However, the mere fact that a witness participated in a prior photo identification does not automatically result in a subsequent live lineup being suggestive, notwithstanding that the suspect was the only person who appeared in both lineups. The witness may be cross-examined on the allegation of suggestiveness, and it is within the province of the jury to assess the credibility of the witness on that issue. 53

A line-up is not impermissibly suggestive merely because the individuals composing the

Case authorities:

Defendant had no federal constitutional right to have his attorney observe oral portion of witness' post-lineup identification of defendant. Sams v Walker (1994, CA2 NY) 18 F3d 167.

Police lineup testimony was admissible, even though defendant's white tennis shoes were distinctive compared to other participants' footwear, where witnesses had ample time to observe robber during crime, prior descriptions were accurate, and physical similarities and otherwise identical clothing of defendant and other lineup participants supported finding that different shoes was not so impermissibly suggestive as to raise substantial possibility of misidentification. People v Ridenour (1994, Colo App) 878 P2d 23, reh den (Feb 17, 1994) and cert den (Colo) 1994 Colo LEXIS 661.

Trial court did not err in denying defense motion to suppress defendant's out-of-court identification in photo lineup where identification procedure used was not so impermissibly suggestive as to give rise to substantial likelihood of irreparable misidentification. Relevant factors were witness' opportunity to see criminal at time of crime, witness' degree of attention at that time, accuracy of witness' prior description of criminal, level of certainty demonstrated by witness at confrontation, and length of time between crime and confrontation. McGee v State (1993) 209 Ga App 261, 433 SE2d 374, 93 Fulton County D R 2670.

Fact that defendant was only member of lineup wearing red or maroon clothing did not render lineup unduly suggestive, since two witnesses who identified defendant relied on their memory of defendant's general build or appearance, and witnesses had had opportunity to view perpetrator at scene of crime. State v Weaver (1995, Mo) 912 SW2d 499.

Court improperly permitted one of 2 complaining witnesses to make in-court identification where court had found that witness had participated in tainted lineup identification procedure, but there was no hearing on issue of whether witness's ability to recall features of perpetrator had survived taint of lineup, and there was no finding that witness had independent recollection or that such recollection could have served as independent basis for reliable in-court identification. People v Manuel (1992, 2d Dept) 182 AD2d 711, 582 NYS2d 735, app den 80 NY2d 834, 587 NYS2d 919, 600 NE2d 646.

Lineup identifications were properly admitted in evidence in prosecution for manslaughter, even though single photograph of defendant had been shown to witnesses 4 months prior to lineup, since suggestiveness of prior identification was sufficiently attenuated in time to nullify any taint. People v Reynoso (1992, 1st Dept) 182 AD2d 546, 582 NYS2d 200, app den 80 NY2d 836, 587 NYS2d 921, 600 NE2d 648.

Lineup was not rendered unduly suggestive by detective's comment to eyewitness prior to lineup that he believed police had arrested same individual she had selected from photographic lineup since officer did not suggest which lineup participant was that individual. People v Simmonds (1992, 2d Dept) 182 AD2d 650, 582 NYS2d 236, app den 80 NY2d 910, 588 NYS2d 835, 602 NE2d 244.

Identification testimony was not subject to suppression merely because retired police detective was unable to remember circumstances surrounding victim's transportation to precinct for purpose of viewing lineup; detective's inability to recall facts did not deny defendant's right to explore issue of suggestiveness with regard to lineup. People v Barton (1992, 2d Dept) 183 AD2d 836, 584 NYS2d 80.

In trial for numerous sexual offenses against 8 victims, defendant failed to establish that lineups were unfair because 2 victims had seen media coverage of his arrest where (1) one victim testified that she saw newspaper report of defendant's arrest, but that she thought it was after she identified him in lineup, and (2) second victim had spent 7 1/2 hours with defendant while she was repeatedly raped and abused, and thus court properly credited her testimony that she had independent recollection of defendant. People v Hamilton (1992, 2d Dept) 186 AD2d 581, 588 NYS2d 379.

Witnesses' identification of defendant in lineup was admissible, although defendant was only person in lineup wearing white pants and perpetrator had been wearing white pants, since each witness had independent basis for identification of defendant. State v Walker (1995, RI) 667 A2d 1242.

In prosecution for masked armed robbery as party to crime, victim's voice identification obtained via voice lineup procedure was reliable, where, as to lineup procedure, each of five voices sounded similar in accent, range, and volume, and, although slight lisp in defendant's voice could be detected, any disparity between defendant's voice and that of other participants fell far short of substantial likelihood of suggestiveness required for reversal, where fact that victim was able to articulate, after procedure, distinguishing features of defendant's voice that allowed him to identify defendant as perpetrator did not condemn integrity of lineup as impermissibly suggestive, and where possibility that procedure might have produced better comparison if co-defendant had been included in lineup did not render procedure used impermissibly suggestive; failure of police to abide by defense counsel's request that they conduct another lineup with both defendant and co-defendant as participants or, in alternative, with codefendant alone did not violate defendant's sixth amendment right to counsel, where defense counsel was present through duration of lineup and even asserted his advice and thoughts concerning procedures, and his function as observer was not frustrated. State v Ledger (1993, App) 175 Wis 2d 116, 499 NW2d 198.

Lineup identification by eyewitness would not be suppressed on ground that lineup was unduly suggestive, even though defendant was wearing stonewashed denim jeans as witness had reported to police, where (1) description of defendant given by witness also included age, height, weight, build, hair color and facial features, (2) visual examination of lineup photograph indicated that fillers were remarkably similar in appearance to defendant, (3) stonewashed denim jeans were commonplace item of clothing and were not so dissimilar in appearance from pants worn by fillers as to call undue attention to defendant, and (4) all fillers wore sweaters and went shoeless, as did defendant, because defendant's jacket and shoes had been confiscated for evidentiary purposes. People v Torres (1992, 1st Dept) 182 AD2d 587, 583 NYS2d 797, app den 80 NY2d 897, 587 NYS2d 927, 600 NE2d 654.

Lineup identification procedure was not improper where (1) officer asked robbery victim if she wanted to view lineup again after she blurted out number other than defendant's and fled in panic from room because of fear that lineup participants could see her, and (2) victim did not recall making any identification and officer did not tell her that she had chosen wrong suspect. People v Dabdaub (1992, 1st Dept) 186 AD2d 481, 589 NYS2d 407, app den 81 NY2d 787, 594 NYS2d 734, 610 NE2d 407.

§ 629 Suggestive showup

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

A "showup" may be distinguished from a "lineup" in that in a showup, one or more suspects are shown by themselves to the witnesses, while in a lineup, a larger array of persons, including the suspect, is presented to the witness. The Supreme Court has noted that the practice of showing up suspects outside a lineup has been widely condemned, but the totality of the circumstances must be assessed before a determination is made that a showup was so suggestive as to make the resulting identification inadmissible. 55 For example, a prompt confrontation between the witness and the suspect may be proper and necessary where the police are not sure how long the witness might survive the injuries suffered in the incident in question. 56 A showup may be proper where the witness states that he is already quite sure of his description of the alleged perpetrator of the crime, but that he wants to see the accused again out of an abundance of caution. 57 The admission of identification testimony into evidence is also proper where the identification is based on the complainant's observations and recollections of how the perpetrators appeared at the time of the crime, and not of how the suspects appeared at the police station the next day when a showup was conducted. 58 On the other hand, an identification based on a showup should be suppressed when the showup was conducted in a jail cell, or where the police insisted on a one-to-one confrontation instead of a lineup. 59 It may also be unduly suggestive to have a group of witnesses confront a suspect at one time, especially where one witness has announced that he believes the suspect to be the person who committed the crime, and the other witnesses have agreed. 60 Identification evidence gained through a showup should also be suppressed where a defendant, who has not been identified in the first confrontation, is dressed in clothes similar to that worn by the perpetrator and is again shown to the witnesses. 61

§ 629 ----Suggestive showup [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Defendant's identification by victim as person who had pointed gun at him, threatened to kill him, and finally hit him on head with gun, did not violate due process although show-up identification which occurred within minutes of incident had not been preceded by pre-apprehension description of defendant by victim, since identification was fully reliable. United States v Watson (1996, CA1 Mass) 76 F3d 4, cert den (1996, US) 1996 US LEXIS 3704.

Showup evidence in narcotics cases should be avoided and, at very least, subjected to Wade hearings to safeguard accuracy given precarious nature of process of identifying individuals in "fast-paced environment" of drug transactions. People v Mato (1994) 83 NY2d 406, 611 NYS2d 92, 633 NE2d 446.

Defendant was entitled to suppression of undercover officer's showup identification made 6 days after drug transaction, since 6-day lapse was not integral police procedure sufficiently connected and contemporaneous to arrest itself, and thus identification was not merely confirmatory; fact that identification was made by trained police officer did not overcome suggestiveness of showup identification. People v Minaya (1992, 2d Dept) 183 AD2d 920, 584 NYS2d 155.

Defendant was not entitled to suppression of identification made following street corner showup held 2 days after crime, since showup was not unduly suggestive as police were not responsible for arranging it, where victim telephoned police to advise them of defendant's whereabouts, and police involvement was limited to transporting victim to stated location to confirm defendant's identity. People v Dade (1992, 4th Dept) 187 AD2d 959, 591 NYS2d 122, app den 81 NY2d 838, 595 NYS2d 737, 611 NE2d 776.

Defendant was entitled to Wade hearing based on his assertion that he had been displayed to witness in suggestive showup, even though he failed to controvert People's affirmation attesting that he was previously known to witness, where affirmation was merely "boiler-plate" form containing incomplete blank spaces instead of specific allegations detailing in what manner and for how long defendant was known to complainant; under circumstances, affirmation did not establish prima facie showing of prior relationship, and thus defendant was under no duty to reply. People v Williams (1992, 1st Dept) 182 AD2d 490, 582 NYS2d 406, app dismd without op 80 NY2d 897, 587 NYS2d 928, 600 NE2d 655, supp op (1st Dept) 189 AD2d 598, 593 NYS2d 180, app den 81 NY2d 978, 598 NYS2d 780, 615 NE2d 237.

Court properly limited defense counsel's cross examination of People's witnesses regarding suggestiveness of station house showup where showup was merely confirmatory. People v Delgado (1992, 2d Dept) 186 AD2d 579, 588 NYS2d 378, app den 80 NY2d 1026, 592 NYS2d 675, 607 NE2d 822.

"Showup" identification procedures in which three witnesses observed defendant while he was sitting in a police car, coupled with statements made by officers to two of the witnesses that they had a suspect, that he had changed clothes, and that he no longer had a mustache, were unnecessarily suggestive. However, under the totality of the circumstances there was no substantial likelihood of misidentification and the identification of defendant by each witness was sufficiently reliable to be admissible where each witness observed defendant as he fled from the scene of an armed robbery; each witness indicated a high degree of attention to the appearance of the man they observed; the witnesses' descriptions of the perpetrator varied from defendant's appearance only because defendant had shaved his mustache and changed clothes between the time the witnesses observed him and his apprehension by the police; the identifications by all three witnesses occurred within an hour after the robbery; and the three witnesses were all unequivocal in their identifications of defendant. State v Capps (1994) 114 NC App 156, 441 SE2d 621.

While pretrial identification obtained by unnecessarily suggestive means is normally not admissible in court, such identification is not per se inadmissible and may be introduced into evidence if found to be reliable and based upon the witness's independent recall absent the illegal police conduct. Willacy v State (1994, Fla) 640 So 2d 1079, 19 FLW S 258.

Evidence of showup identification was not admissible where it occurred about 2 1/2 hours after victim had been robbed, both victim and defendant were transported back to crime scene for showup, victim had been told by police that they knew name of his robber and had suspect in custody, defendant was in handcuffs and escorted by uniformed officer when viewed by victim, and defendant was not previously known to victim; in such circumstances, lineup was required. People v Johnson (1993) 81 NY2d 828, 595 NYS2d 385, 611 NE2d 286.

While limits of appropriate time period between alleged crime and showup identification may vary from case to case, emphasis must be on prompt and immediate nature of identification after crime has been committed, not after defendant has been arrested. People v Johnson (1993) 81 NY2d 828, 595 NYS2d 385, 611 NE2d 286.

§ 630 Suggestive photographic evidence

--

The use of pretrial photographic identification of suspects is permissible, but the Supreme Court has recognized that there are risks inherent in this method of identification. 62 Accordingly, while initial identifications by photographs are not prohibited, a claim of prejudice may result in the suppression of such identification evidence. 63 Factors which do not render the use of photographic identifications unduly suggestive, and which do not lead to suppression, include the display of pictures of the suspect and of other persons, in contrast to the display of pictures of the suspect only or of a group of pictures containing numerous pictures of the suspect, 64 the use of a mug shot, if its probative worth outweighs its prejudicial effect in revealing the defendant's prior encounters with the law, 65 and the display of a picture in which the suspect is wearing a distinctive uniform, as distinguished from the display of a picture in which the suspect is dressed in a manner conforming to the description of the perpetrator. 66

If the police officers make suggestive remarks during the viewing, an in-court identification will be suppressed, 67 while it will not be suppressed if no evidence is presented that the officers made suggestive remarks to the witness. 68 Consideration must also be given to the problem of whether any subsequent in-court identification of the accused is so tainted by the witness' identification at an unfairly conducted lineup as to be inadmissible, or whether the in-court identification is adequately supported by an independent source, such as the witness' own recollection of the defendant while the crime was in progress. 69

A defendant does not have the right to have counsel attend a display of photographs to witnesses, and photographic identifications may be used at trial notwithstanding the fact that counsel did not attend the viewing. 70

§ 630 ----Suggestive photographic evidence [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Defendant's right against self-incrimination was not violated by prosecutor's comment at trial as to defendant's refusal to put on hat for photographs to be used for identification, since defendant had no Fifth Amendment right to refuse to put on hat. United States v Bullard (1994, CA1 Mass) 37 F3d 765, cert den (1995, US) 131 L Ed 2d 734, 115 S Ct 1809.

Pre-trial photographic identifications of defendant by robbery victims were not unduly suggestive in violation of due process where 50 photograph array was presented to each victim in entirely neutral fashion and no attention was directed by police officers to any particular picture in album. United States v Thai (1994, CA2 NY) 29 F3d 785.

Defendant's due process rights were not violated by store clerk's in-court identification of defendant as robber where store clerk's pretrial photographic identification from police photo array was not impermissibly suggestive. Romero v Tansy (1995, CA10 NM) 46 F3d 1024.

A photographic lineup was not impermissibly suggestive, where accused was identified by a witness to whom accused had sold the murder victim's car, and although several of the photographs had writing on them, the witness testified that he had spent 30 minutes with accused and had paid no attention to the writing. Gorby v State (1993, Fla) 630 So

2d 544, 18 FLW S 623, petition for certiorari filed (Mar 25, 1994).

Lineup identification of defendant, conducted 3 months after victims' viewing of photographs of defendant, was sufficiently attenuated from photographic identification to insure its reliability. People v Murchison (1993, 2d Dept) 189 AD2d 900, 592 NYS2d 988, app den 81 NY2d 890, 597 NYS2d 951, 613 NE2d 983 and app den 81 NY2d 890, 597 NYS2d 951, 613 NE2d 983.

Family Court properly denied juvenile's motion for Wade hearing on ground that suggestiveness of photographic array was not concern where, during 5-minute encounter during which robbery victim had ample opportunity to observe juvenile, victim recognized him by his unusual hairstyle, having previously seen him approximately 14 times during year prior to incident at junior high school which they both attended, and thus photographic viewing was merely confirmatory. Re Raul F. (1992, 1st Dept) 186 AD2d 74, 588 NYS2d 546.

A display of a single photograph to a crime witness raises no due process concerns unless it is determined to be unnecessarily or impermissibly suggestive, and the inquiry into whether the procedure was unnecessarily or impermissibly suggestive involves inquiry into whether good reason existed for the procedure. Commonwealth v Austin, 421 Mass 357, 657 NE2d 458.

An inquiry into whether there was good reason to show a single photograph to a crime witness involved issues relating to the nature of the crime involved and corresponding concerns for public safety, the need for efficient police investigation in the immediate aftermath of a crime and usefulness of prompt confirmation of the accuracy of investigatory information; further, each case must be resolved on its own peculiar facts. Commonwealth v Austin, 421 Mass 357, 657 NE2d 458.

During an investigation of an attempted bank robbery, there was good reason for the police to show 2 witnesses a videotape of another bank robbery, notwithstanding that such procedure constituted a one- on-one identification procedure, where (1) 3 armed bank robberies had occurred within a few days, (2) the witnesses had examined over 200 photographs without identifying a suspect, (3) the witnesses were certain that they could identify the robber if they saw him again, and one had assisted in the creation of a composite sketch, and (4) the videotaped robbery bore a high degree of similarity to the modus operandi of the attempted bank robbery viewed by the witnesses. Commonwealth v Austin, 421 Mass 357, 657 NE2d 458.

Identification procedure was not unduly suggestive, even though victims jointly viewed stack of photographs on top of which defendant's photo had been placed, where there was no evidence that victims consulted with one another in determining which picture depicted their assailant, and both victims had simultaneously exclaimed "that's him" within seconds of having photos placed in front of them. People v Byrd (1992, 2d Dept) 183 AD2d 773, 583 NYS2d 849, app den 80 NY2d 902, 588 NYS2d 827, 602 NE2d 235.

Court would affirm determination finding petitioner guilty of assaulting another inmate, despite absence of opportunity to challenge fairness of photographic array, where review of transcript of interview of witness who identified petitioner from array clearly showed that use of array was purely confirmatory in nature, and that actual identification was based on witness's prior acquaintanceship with petitioner. Santiago v Hoke (1992, 3d

Suppression of identification evidence of 2 witnesses was not required under CLS CPL § 710.30(2) where witnesses made photographic identifications from photo array shown to them by police 2 days after defendant's arraignment, even though notice of identifications was not served on defendant until 62 days after arraignment, when prosecutor first learned of them, since 15-day time limit of statute does not apply to any postarraignment identifications, even those taking place within said 15 days. People v G. (1993, Sup) 158 Misc 2d 893, 602 NYS2d 512.

Photo array containing pictures of individuals with significantly disparate features did not constitute unfair and tainted identification procedure as to codefendant, whom victim identified therein as other shooter involved, where police had no inkling at time photo array was compiled that codefendant was actually other shooter, and photo array consisting merely of known associates of previously identified defendant. People v Modeste (1993, Sup) 159 Misc 2d 250, 603 NYS2d 955.

The trial court did not err by finding that no single photograph of defendant was ever shown to a robbery victim prior to a pretrial photographic lineup and that the photographic identification procedure was not impermissibly suggestive, although the victim testified that he was shown a single photograph of defendant prior to the photographic lineup, where a detective testified that the victim was shown bank surveillance pictures of the robbery at an automatic teller machine and asked to describe the events depicted in the pictures in order to verify that a robbery had occurred, and that the victim was shown a single photograph of another alleged perpetrator but was not shown a single photograph of defendant. State v Lindsey (1995) 118 NC App 549, 455 SE2d 909.

Drug defendant's due process rights were violated by impermissibly suggestive photo array identification, in which accused's picture stood out from all the other photographs by different skin color and hair type, where there was no independently reliable identification by witnesses. United States v Eltayib (1996, CA2 NY) 88 F3d 157.

§ 631 Inapplicability of exclusionary rule

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

The fact that evidence has been obtained by means of entrapment is not a ground for excluding it. 71 A claim that evidence should be suppressed because of entrapment has been rejected as being an undue extension of the exclusionary doctrine, 72 the courts following the common-law rule that a court should not exclude evidence which was unethically, but not unconstitutionally, secured. 73

While the circumstances of a contingent fee arrangement may properly be considered in connection with weighing an informer's testimony, the use of such an arrangement does not preclude the admissibility of the informer's testimony. 74

◆ Practice guide: A cautionary instruction regarding the testimony of a paid informer having an interest in the outcome of a prosecution may be necessary to focus the jury's attention on the question of the credibility of the witness. 75

Incriminating statements made after indictment and while in jail by an accused to a fellow inmate who was an undisclosed government informant paid on a contingent fee basis, are inadmissible at trial, the government having violated the accused's Sixth Amendment right to counsel by intentionally creating a situation likely to induce the accused to make incriminating statements without the assistance of counsel and having deliberately elicited the incriminating statements. 76

3. Evidence Derived From Illegally Obtained Evidence [633-642]

a. "Fruit of the Poisonous Tree" Doctrine [633]

§ 633 Suppression of tainted derivative evidence

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

The exclusionary rule prohibits the introduction of derivative evidence, both tangible and testimonial, that is the product of primary evidence seized during an unlawful search or that is otherwise acquired as the indirect result of an unlawful search, up to the point at which the connection with the unlawful search becomes so attenuated as to dissipate the taint. 77 Thus, under the "fruit of the poisonous tree" doctrine, evidence which is located by the police as a result of information or leads obtained from illegally seized evidence is inadmissible in a criminal prosecution. 78 Furthermore, information gained from a tainted statement made after an unlawful arrest cannot properly be used as a lead for finding physical evidence, and any physical evidence so found is a fruit of the unlawful arrest and interrogation and must be suppressed. 79 Fingerprints, 80 identification evidence, 81 and physical evidence 82 obtained as a result of an illegal arrest or detention are inadmissible as fruits of that illegal arrest. Evidence derived from information gained from illegal wiretaps must also be suppressed. 83 However, evidence will not be excluded as fruit of the poisonous tree unless the illegality is at least the "but for" cause of the discovery of the evidence. 84

◆ Observation: The core rationale for extending the exclusionary rule to evidence that is the fruit of unlawful police conduct has been that this course is needed to deter police from violations of constitutional and statutory protection. 85 On this rationale, the prosecution is not to be put in a better position than it would have been in if no illegality had transpired. 86 The doctrine has been applied in connection with violations of the Fifth and Sixth Amendments, as well as of the Fourth Amendment. 87

If the police use information in the suspect's statement to conduct a search, narcotics which are seized cannot be admitted into evidence as they are a "fruit of the poisonous tree" because the search was tainted by the illegal confession. 88

§ 633 ----Suppression of tainted derivative evidence [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

District court was entitled to hear live testimony from one witness at suppression hearing before magistrate judge in order to make independent assessment of that witness's credibility without calling other witnesses who had testified at hearing; his credibility did not hinge on credibility of other witnesses since their testimony merely failed to support, and did not contradict, reheard witness's testimony. United States v Rosa (1993, CA2 NY) 11 F3d 315, 38 Fed Rules Evid Serv 661, cert den (US) 62 USLW 3691.

Defendant's perceived inconsistent statements to DEA agents at airport, on which statements District Court relied to find that agents properly seized defendant's suitcase and subjected it to legal search, were tainted fruit of unlawful seizure of defendant that occurred prior to agents' hearing of statements and thus could not be considered in determining reasonableness of seizing suitcase. United States v Lambert (1995, CA10 Kan) 46 F3d 1064.

Marijuana located by police in unconstitutional search was admissible in civil action by grower challenging assessment of marijuana tax, as tax assessment was neither criminal nor quasi-criminal in nature. Turner v State Dep't of Revenue (1994, Ala) 643 So 2d 568.

Where hearing-impaired defendant effectively communicated with police through written questions and answers without assistance of sign language interpreter, noncompliance with Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 USCS §§ 701 et seq.) does not, by itself, warrant suppression. People v Gaylord (1994, App Div, 4th Dept) 621 NYS2d 247, 8 ADD 229, app den (1995) 84 NY2d 1031.

In appeal from judgment convicting defendant of possession of short-barreled shotgun, because defendant failed to raise argument regarding involuntariness of statements at trial court, or to argue on appeal that subsequent statements were inadmissible as fruit of poisonous tree, court of appeals declined to indulge in speculation but rather held that trial court's findings regarding voluntariness were not clearly erroneous (Stats §§ 805.17(2), 941.28(1)(c)). State v Pounds (1993, App) 176 Wis 2d 315, 500 NW2d 373.

In prosecution for possessing heroin with intent to distribute in which defendant pleaded guilty, statements made by him to probation officer and incorporated in presentence investigation report admitting that he owned cocaine found in his apartment did not constitute fruit of illegal search conducted on day of his arrest and thus could properly be considered in sentencing him where statements were voluntarily provided after District Court had ordered cocaine suppressed as product of illegal search so that they were sufficiently act of free will to purge primary taint of illegal search. United States v Raposa (1996, CA1 RI) 84 F3d 502.

b. Particular Evidence [634-638]

§ 634 Fruits of illegal electronic surveillance

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Evidence derived from the contents of an illegally intercepted communication is rendered inadmissible in federal court by statute, 89 and an aggrieved person has standing to move to suppress evidence derived from the contents of any wire or oral communication on the grounds specified by the statute. 90 The purpose of this exclusionary rule, like the "fruit of the poisonous tree" doctrine under the Fourth Amendment, 91 is to deter invasions of privacy by denying officials the fruits of their misconduct. 92

Problems with the fruits of illegal wiretaps often occur where a prosecutor seeks a new wiretap based on information learned from an illegal wiretap. For example, an initial interception order may be invalid for failure to obtain the authorization of the designated Assistant Attorney General. 93 If evidence secured in that illegal wiretap is used to obtain an extension of the interception order, 94 or to justify a separate application for a new interception order, 95 evidence derived from the extension or second wiretap may not be used, even though the second application was properly authorized, 96 where the information obtained from the illegal wiretap formed the essence of the allegation of probable cause supporting the applications for later wiretaps. 97

§ 635 Testimony of witness tainted by illegal evidence

If an accused is forced to give damaging testimony after wrongfully obtained confessions were admitted into evidence against him, the damaging testimony is an inadmissible fruit of such confessions. 98 However, the problem is more complicated if the fruit of the illegal evidence is the testimony of a witness who is not the defendant. 99 In the latter case, the court must take into account the witness' willingness to testify, and the possibility that the witness could be permanently disabled from testifying about relevant and material facts, regardless of how unrelated such testimony might be to the purpose of the original illegal search or the evidence discovered thereby. 1 The Supreme Court will also weigh the cost of silencing a witness against the possible deterrent effect of applying the exclusionary rule under the circumstance. 2 While no mathematical weight can be assigned to the above factors, the Supreme Court has said that these factors point to the conclusion that the exclusionary rule should be invoked with much reluctance if it will result in the suppression of the testimony of a live witness. 3 Thus, the Supreme Court has permitted the admission at trial of testimony of a witness whose identity was disclosed by a defendant who was given inadequate Miranda warnings. 4

Documents obtained by the government from third parties are suppressible where, absent an illegal search, government investigators might not have known the identity of the third parties or what to ask them, the government anticipated that the illegal search would help lead to the third parties and documents, and the third parties would not have come forward on their own had the investigators not sought them out. ⁵ However, documents in the government's possession prior to the illegal search are not to be suppressed even if they have been commingled with documents tainted by the illegal search, although the burden is on the government to show what particular documents are free from taint. ⁶ A blanket suppression order is justified if the government cannot demonstrate which documents are clearly separable from those affected by a general taint. ⁷

If the police conduct one illegal search, and on the basis of information gained in that first search, conduct a second search and seize physical evidence, the physical evidence seized is a fruit of the initial wrongful search and must be suppressed. 8 However, if a defendant consents to the second search, physical evidence seized is admissible, even though the first search may have been illegal, so long as the consent is a voluntary and independent act sufficient to break the causal connection between the alleged primary illegality and evidence found as a result of the second search. 9

If police officers find a key during the course of an illegal search, and use the key to enter other premises and seize property located there, the property seized is not admissible into evidence. 10 Similarly, drugs taken from a defendant following a custodial interrogation without probable cause and an unjustified pat-down search are tainted by the illegal detention and must be suppressed. 11

In prosecution for, inter alia, manslaughter and death by automobile, trial court properly suppressed results of blood test, obtained over defendant's objection, where, at time blood was drawn, record showed that police lacked probable cause to "seize" blood without warrant; defendant had demonstrated no evidence of any physical manifestation of having consumed alcohol when observed by police officer who was involved with drawing of blood. State v O'Loughlin (1994, App Div) 270 NJ Super 472, 637 A2d 553.

c. Limitations on Doctrine [639-642]

§ 639 Independent source rule, generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

While evidence gained as a fruit of misconduct by the government cannot be used in a criminal prosecution, this prohibition does not mean the facts thus obtained can never be proved. 14 If knowledge of these facts can be gained from an independent source, the facts can be proved through such independent evidence. 15

The rule is not limited in application to evidence obtained for the first time during an independent lawful search, but also applies to evidence initially discovered during, or as a consequence of, an unlawful search, but later obtained independently from activities untainted by the initial illegality. 16 In the classic independent source situation, information which is received through an illegal source is considered to be cleanly obtained when it arrives through an independent source. 17

The independent source doctrine rests upon the policy that, while the government should not profit from its illegal activity, neither should it be placed in a worse position than it would otherwise have occupied. 18 The exclusion of evidence with an independent source would put the prosecution in a worse position than it would have occupied absent any error or violation. 19 Thus, the independent source doctrine teaches that the interest of society in deterring unlawful police conduct and the public interest in having juries receive all probative evidence on a crime are properly balanced by putting the prosecution in the same position it would have been in if no police error or misconduct had occurred. 20

The Supreme Court reasons further that the incentives operating in the independent source situation are such that an officer with probable cause sufficient to obtain a search warrant would be foolish to enter the premises first in an unlawful manner, because doing so would risk suppression of all evidence on the premises, both seen and unseen, since the officer's action would add to the normal burden of convincing a magistrate that there is probable cause the much more onerous burden of convincing a trial court that no information gained from the illegal entry affected either the law enforcement officer's decision to seek a warrant or the magistrate's decision to grant it. Moreover, the officer without sufficient probable cause to obtain a search warrant would have no added incentive to conduct an unlawful entry, since anything found could not be used to establish probable cause before a magistrate. 21

The rule is applicable only to evidence derived from illegal government conduct and not to evidence obtained as a direct result of an unconstitutional search or seizure 22 or an illegal lineup. 23 Both tangible and intangible tainted evidence may be admissible under the independent source doctrine, since reseizure of tangible evidence already seized is no more impossible than rediscovery of intangible evidence already discovered. 24

Even if x-ray of defendant's suitcase at airport was unlawful, cocaine found in suitcase after defendant consented to Customs agents' search was not inadmissible in evidence as "fruit of poisonous tree" where, notwithstanding agent told defendant about x-ray, trained drug-sniffing dog's alert to presence of drugs in suitcase provided agents with sufficient grounds for seeking defendant's consent. United States v Navedo-Colon (1993, CA1 Puerto Rico) 996 F2d 1337, summary op at (CA1 Puerto Rico) 21 M.L.W. 3029, 14 R.I.L.W. 338.

The trial court did not err by finding that a robbery victim's in-court identification of defendant was based upon what he observed the night of the robbery at a bank teller machine and was of independent origin from a pretrial photographic identification where the victim testified that he was face to face with defendant for ten minutes in a well-lighted area with nothing concealing defendant's facial features and that his corrected vision is 20\20, and a detective testified that the victim's initial description of defendant after the robbery was "pretty close" to his actual appearance and that defendant immediately picked defendant's picture at the photographic lineup and seemed positive about his identification. State v Lindsey (1995) 118 NC App 549, 455 SE2d 909.

§ 640 --Burden of proof

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

The independent source exception contemplates the actuality and not the mere possibility that there was an independent source of information leading to the discovery of the evidence. 25 The burden is on the government to prove that the evidence sought to be introduced had an independent origin, 26 and it is not sufficient for the government to show it had sufficient independent information which would have led, in the normal course of events, to the discovery of the questioned evidence. 27

§ 641 Attenuation doctrine

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Notwithstanding the exclusionary rule, under which evidence obtained as an indirect result of a Fourth Amendment violation is generally deemed inadmissible "fruit of the poisonous tree," there are circumstances under which the causal connection between an illegal search or seizure and the acquisition of evidence is so remote or attenuated as to purge the taint of the constitutional violation and to render the evidence admissible. 28 The important question is whether, granting establishment of the primary illegality, the evidence to which the objection is made has been come at by exploitation of that illegality or instead by means sufficiently distinguishable to be purged of the primary taint. 29

◆ Caution: Attenuation analysis—an inquiry as to whether the indirect fruits of an illegal search or seizure should be suppressed as bearing a sufficiently close relationship to the underlying illegality—is appropriate only where, as a threshold matter, it is determined that the challenged evidence is in some sense the product of illegal government activity. 30

No sufficient attenuation of the taint of an unconstitutional search or seizure will be found, so as to render admissible evidence obtained as a consequence of such a search or seizure, unless there is a showing that the evidence was yielded voluntarily and not by coercion. 31

In determining whether the causal connection between an illegal search or seizure and the subsequent obtaining of evidence is so attenuated as to render such evidence admissible, the lapse of time between the illegal act and the obtaining of evidence is a factor to be considered. 32 However, where the search occurs as a result of an illegal detention, this factor has to be balanced against the degree of strictness of the custodial conditions during the detention. Where a congenial atmosphere prevails during the detention, a relatively short lapse of time may be sufficient to purge the taint. 33

Other factors which may properly be considered by a court in determining whether the taint of an unconstitutional search or seizure has been sufficiently attenuated to render the evidence admissible, include:

- Whether any events occurring between the time of an illegal search or seizure and the subsequent obtaining of evidence were of such significance as to attenuate the causal connection sufficiently to render the evidence admissible 34
- Whether the search or seizure was conducted with an improper purpose, and whether the illegality was flagrant 35

§ 641 ----Attenuation doctrine [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Attenuation doctrine, by which taint of unlawful arrest may be so attenuated as to render admissible subsequently obtained evidence, is not an exception to exclusionary rule. Instead, it is device by which it is determined whether evidence was obtained as result of unlawful police action and therefore subject to exclusionary rule. Attenuation doctrine is applicable to motions to suppress under CCP art. 38.23. State v Johnson (1992, Tex App Texarkana) 843 SW2d 252, petition for discretionary review gr (Apr 14, 1993).

§ 642 Inevitable discovery rule

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Information obtained in an unlawful search, or as a result of an incriminating statement made without the advice of counsel, is not rendered inadmissible under the "fruit of the poisonous tree" doctrine where it is shown that such evidence would have been discovered even if the illegality had not occurred. 36 This ultimate or inevitable discovery exception to the exclusionary rule has been adopted by the Supreme Court in holding that evidence of the condition of the body of a murder victim, as well as related evidence, is admissible despite the body's having been discovered through statements made by the accused during an unlawful interrogation. 37 Exclusion of evidence that would inevitably have been discovered would undermine the adversary system by putting the prosecution in a worse position than it would have been absent any error or violation, while adding nothing to the integrity or fairness of criminal trials. 38 The prosecution must establish the inevitability of discovery by a preponderance of the evidence, but is not required to prove the absence of bad faith in obtaining the information. 39

There is a functional similarity between the inevitable discovery rule and the independent source rule, 40 in that exclusion of evidence having an independent source, like exclusion of evidence that would inevitably have been discovered, would put the government in a worse position than it would have occupied absent any error or violation. 41 In fact, the inevitable discovery doctrine, with its distinctive requirements, is in reality an extrapolation from the independent source doctrine; since tainted evidence would be admissible if in fact discovered through an independent source, it should be admissible if it inevitably would have been discovered. 42

The inevitable discovery exception to the exclusionary rule applies to the direct as well as the indirect products of an unlawful search by the government. 43

An inventory search at FBI office of defendant's bag in which cocaine was found following his arrest at a bus station was a proper incident of his arrest and detention, but it did not follow that such search would inevitably have led to the discovery of cocaine where a review of the record revealed no evidence that such searches were an invariable, routine procedure in the booking and detention of a suspect. 4. Presentation and Disposition of Suppression Motion [643-654]

§ 643 Time for presenting motion, generally

--

Under the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure 44 and the practice followed in many states, 45 a motion to suppress evidence must be made prior to trial, and failure to do so constitutes a waiver of the right to make such a request, although the court, for cause shown, may grant relief from the waiver. 46 Similarly, the wiretapping statutes provide that a motion to suppress the contents of an intercepted wire or oral communication must be made before the trial, hearing, or proceeding, unless there was no opportunity to make such motion or the aggrieved person was not aware of the grounds for the motion. 47

The rules and statutes requiring that a motion to suppress be made before trial, if the defendant then has knowledge of the grounds on which to base the motion, are a crystallization of Supreme Court decisions requiring this procedure. 48 The rules are designed to eliminate from the trial disputes over police conduct which are not immediately relevant to the question of guilt. 49 However, the rules should be applied with some flexibility, because the exclusionary rule carries out an important social policy and not a narrow procedural requirement. 50

◆ Caution: Where the delay is inexcusable, a motion to suppress evidence may be untimely when filed after the trial court's filing deadline, even if made before trial. Counsel's previous lack of awareness of a court decision which forms the basis of the motion is not a sufficient excuse. 51

A suppression motion comes too late if it is presented after a guilty plea. 52

◆ Observation: The exclusionary rule does not become operative or invocable until there is actually or within contemplation a proceeding in which the state proposes to introduce the evidence which is alleged to have been illegally seized. Where a suppression motion is made in the absence of a threatened or pending action, it may be more accurate to articulate the basis of the denial of relief not on a lack of standing basis but rather on the theory there is no justiciable matter before the court since the impact of a suppression order goes solely to the proceeding in which the evidence is to be used, even though the object of the suppression order is the evidence itself. 53 Dismissal of a suppression motion must obtain when there is no threatened or pending prosecution in the jurisdiction in which the motion is made, even if there is such a prosecution pending or threatened elsewhere. 54

Absent demonstration of cause for failing to file timely motion to suppress evidence based on detention and seizure for which police officers and FBI agents allegedly lacked probable cause, Court of Appeals would not address merits of defendant's Fourth Amendment claim. United States v Howard (1993, CA2 Conn) 998 F2d 42.

Defendant by not raising Fourth Amendment objections during District Court proceedings waived his right to object, and thus Court of Appeals would not entertain those issues on his appeal from his conviction. United States v Scarborough (1994, CA6 Mich) 43 F3d 1021.

In appeal from judgment convicting defendant of possession of short-barreled shotgun, because defendant failed to raise argument regarding involuntariness of statements at trial court, or to argue on appeal that subsequent statements were inadmissible as fruit of poisonous tree, court of appeals declined to indulge in speculation but rather held that trial court's findings regarding voluntariness were not clearly erroneous (Stats §§ 805.17(2), 941.28(1)(c)). State v Pounds (1993, App) 176 Wis 2d 315, 500 NW2d 373.

§ 644 --Presentation at trial

View Entire Section

Generally speaking, a suppression motion may not be entertained at trial where a party failed to move to suppress evidence in pretrial proceedings. 55 While a trial court may exercise its discretion to waive such a default and hear a suppression motion presented at trial, 56 it generally will not do so where the defendant or his counsel were aware before trial that the prosecution possessed questionable evidence. 57 It is within the sound discretion of the court to consider a renewed suppression motion at trial after the motion has been presented and denied before trial. 58 The rationale usually given for removing suppression questions from the trial itself is that interrupting the course of the trial for such auxiliary inquiries impedes the momentum of the main proceeding and breaks the continuity of the jury's attention. 59

A trial witness may waive his objection that the prosecutor's questions to him were based on illegally obtained wiretap evidence by delaying his objection until he is called to the stand. 60

◆ Caution: If a witness waives his right to a suppression hearing, but refuses to answer questions propounded by the prosecution on the ground that they are based on information gained through illegal wiretapping, the witness may be held in contempt. 61

If a conviction has been reversed and remanded for a new trial, or if a mistrial occurred, the defendants' original rights are reinstated and they are permitted to file motions to suppress evidence prior to their retrial. 62 However, a court will not entertain such a motion during the course of the second trial, where the arresting officer testified during the first trial concerning the search and seizure, and no motion to suppress was made before the second trial. 63

§ 645 --Presentation before second trial [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

The prosecutor's statement in his jury argument in a trial for the first-degree murder of a child that defendant needed to show "adequate provocation" in order to negate deliberation was not an incorrect statement of the law which prevented the jury from properly considering a verdict of second- degree murder. Rather, the prosecutor was referring to the kind of provocation which is insufficient to negate malice and reduce the murder to manslaughter but is sufficient to incite defendant to act suddenly and without deliberation. State v Burr (1995) 341 NC 263, 461 SE2d 602.

§ 646 Standing to move for suppression; Fourth Amendment violations

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

The protection offered by the Fourth Amendment is personal, and only a victim of an unconstitutional search and seizure may complain. 64 A person who is not a victim of an unconstitutional search and seizure cannot object to the introduction of evidence which was seized, 65 and the supervisory power of the federal courts does not authorize a federal court to suppress, at the instance of an accused not a victim of an illegal search and seizure, otherwise admissible evidence on the ground that it was unlawfully seized from a third party who is not before the court. 66

As a general rule, a person who brings a motion to suppress evidence on the ground that it was seized during an illegal search must assert an interest in the property seized, or a property or possessory interest in the premises searched. 67 Originally it was believed that an exception to this general rule existed where a defendant was charged with a possessory crime, on the theory that the defendant would have to admit possession in order to establish standing. 68 However, in light of later Supreme Court cases holding that testimony at a suppression hearing cannot later be admitted at trial over the defendant's objection, 69 and that the Fourth Amendment only protects persons who have a legitimate expectation of privacy in the place searched, 70 the "automatic standing" rule has been abandoned; the Supreme Court will no longer consider the mere possession of seized property as a substitute for a factual finding that its owner had a legitimate expectation of privacy in the area searched. 71

Determining whether a legitimate or justifiable expectation of privacy exists, in turn, involves two inquiries:

(1) the claimant must have a subjective expectation of privacy in the area searched; and

(2) that subjective expectation, viewed objectively, must be reasonable. 72

There is generally no reasonable expectation of privacy in abandoned property. 73

§ 646 ----Standing to move for suppression; Fourth Amendment violations [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

There is no "coconspirator exception" to 4th Amendment standing requirements. Defendants' participation in conspiracy to deliver cocaine did not, in itself, give them an expectation of privacy in automobile possessed by another member of conspiracy. United States v Padilla (1993, US) 123 L Ed 2d 635, 113 S Ct 1936, 93 CDOS 3207, 93 Daily Journal DAR 5463, 7 FLW Fed S 244, on remand, remanded (CA9) 993 F2d 721, 93 CDOS 3800, 93 Daily Journal DAR 6508.

Defendants lacked standing to protest police officers' search of parking lot in which loaded pistols and crack cocaine were found under parked cars where defendants failed to assert any reasonable expectation of privacy in seized contraband; neither defendant personally swore out any affidavits with respect to such expectation, lone affidavit in support of their motion to suppress was prepared by attorney who had no first-hand knowledge of relevant events and contained only conclusory allegations that police lacked probable cause or reasonable, articulable suspicion of criminal activity when they arrested defendants, and defendants' interest in suppressing contraband to avoid its evidentiary force against them was not interest protected by Fourth Amendment. United States v Lewis (1994, CA1 Mass) 40 F3d 1325.

Defendant passenger in minivan that state trooper stopped for changing lanes without signaling had standing to challenge seizure resulting from stop but had no standing to challenge search of minivan's contents. United States v Roberson (1993, CA5 Tex) 6 F3d 1088.

In prosecution for possession of check stolen from mail, defendant had standing to contest law enforcement officers' warrantless search and seizure of checkbook from his friend's hotel room in which friend had lived for approximately three years and in which defendant was overnight guest; fact that checkbook was found in trash can did not constitute abandonment of it so as to deprive defendant of such standing where checkbook was seized prior to his initial denial of interest in checks. United States v Wilson (1994, CA5 Tex) 36 F3d 1298.

Defendant driver of van had no standing to object to DEA agents' search of van after valid investigatory stop where, by stating that van was stolen, he effectively disclaimed privacy interest in van and thus abandoned it. United States v Quiroz-Hernandez (1995, CA5 Tex) 48 F3d 858, substituted op, in part, adhered to, reh, en banc, den (1995, CA5 Tex) 1995 US App LEXIS 10311.

Defendant van passenger, who had no legitimate expectation of privacy in bag containing drugs which she denied owning and which was found in van after state trooper had stopped it for speeding, was not entitled to challenge search of bag; and, even if she had requisite expectation of privacy, trooper had authority to open and search bag where he had probable cause to search van. United States v Critton (1995, CA6 Ohio) 43 F3d 1089.

In prosecution for manufacturing marijuana, defendant had no legitimate expectation of privacy in codefendant's house and thus lacked standing to challenge officers' search of house pursuant to warrant during which marijuana was found in codefendant's son's suitcase. United States v Jones (1994, CA8 Ark) 16 F3d 275.

Narcotics defendant had no standing to contest police officer's search of his tote bag left in open field that was adjacent to his house and yard but that he neither owned nor leased where he failed to demonstrate legitimate expectation of privacy in bag; he put on no evidence whatsoever that he sought to preserve bag and its contents as private or that he even believed that they would be private. United States v Stallings (1994, CA8 Ark) 28 F3d 58.

Defendant's apparent ownership interest in ship and status as captain supported his standing to challenge search of ship on Fourth Amendment grounds. United States v Juda (1995, CA9 Cal) 46 F3d 961, 95 CDOS 846, 95 Daily Journal DAR 1546.

Defendant driver of truck allegedly provided him by construction company had standing to challenge stop of truck for speeding and his subsequent detention. United States v Gonzalez-Lerma (1994, CA10 Utah) 14 F3d 1479.

In prosecution for possession of marijuana, defendant did not have standing to challenge search of car after lawful investigative stop based on reasonable suspicion merely because she was passenger in car or because she was charged with possessory offense. United States v Eylicio- Montoya (1994, CA10 NM) 18 F3d 845.

Defendant, who was driver of rental car stopped by highway patrolman for speeding, had no legitimate expectation of privacy in car and thus had no standing to challenge search of car or seizure of cocaine found therein where car was rented by third party and defendant was not authorized to drive it. United States v Jones (1995, CA10 Wyo) 44 F3d 860.

Defendant did not have standing to object to the search and seizure of a briefcase and its contents found in his wife's car trunk when defendant never asserted an ownership or possessory interest in the briefcase. State v Cohen (1994) 117 NC App 265, 450 SE2d 503.

A defendant on trial for conspiracy to traffic cocaine had no standing to challenge the admissibility of a coconspirator's statement to the police on the ground that the statement was the fruit of an illegal stop since defendant cannot assert the Fourth Amendment rights of another. State v Smith (1995) 117 NC App 671, 452 SE2d 827.

The trial court did not err in a prosecution arising from defendant hiring someone to kill her former husband and assault a woman whom he was dating and from an attack being carried out on the former husband by admitting telephone records which showed telephone calls from defendant to a coconspirator testifying against her. Assuming standing under the North Carolina Constitution, defendant failed in her burden of showing sufficient action attributable to the State which would implicate the constitutional protections against unreasonable search and seizure. The records were originally recorded in the usual course of Southern Bell's business and not under some State directive, there is no subpoena in the record, and defendant's argument that sufficient action attributable to the State exists because the State called a Southern Bell employee to testify about and produce the records at trial was rejected. State v Suggs (1995) 117 NC App 654, 453 SE2d 211.

Even if the stop of a vehicle in which defendant and a coconspirator were riding was unconstitutional because officers did not have a reasonable, articulable suspicion of criminal activity, defendant did not have a reasonable expectation of privacy in the coconspirator's luggage where defendant did not assert any property interest in that luggage, and cocaine found in the coconspirator's luggage was admissible in defendant's trial for conspiracy to traffic cocaine. State v Smith (1995) 117 NC App 671, 452 SE2d 827.

The driver and passenger of a borrowed car possessed standing to challenge the search and seizure of the evidence found in the car, where the driver demonstrated that he had the owner's permission to use the vehicle and accordingly had a reasonable expectation of privacy in the vehicle, and where both the driver and passenger were equally seized and their freedom of movement was equally affected by the stop and search of the car. State v Carter, 69 OS3d 57, 630 NE2d 355.

Trial court properly denied defendant's motion to suppress evidence seized during search of his wife's automobile where defendant, who was suspect in homicide case, was arrested when he and wife exited automobile at service station, defendant and wife were transported to police station and automobile, which was registered to wife, was towed to police station, wife freely and voluntarily consented to search of automobile, and police searched automobile and found handgun under front passenger seat, bullets from which matched those recovered from victim's body. Even if defendant had standing to challenge search and police lacked probable cause, search was permissible on basis of wife's consent. State v Martinez (1993, RI) 624 A2d 291.

In prosecution for cultivation of marijuana, trial court improperly held that defendant did not have standing to protest warrantless search of land owned by his father, where one element of offense of cultivation of marijuana is that accused "own or control lands," and standing is met when defendant has a clear possessory interest in land. Fite v State (1993, Okla Crim) 873 P2d 293, reh den, in part, on reh (Okla Crim) 1994 Okla Crim App LEXIS 21.

Where defendant passenger in vehicle stopped by police for equipment violation, who was discovered to possess cocaine, challenged lawfulness of vehicle stop on Fourth Amendment grounds, court of appeals erroneously permitted challenge. State v Howard (1993) 176 Wis 2d 921, 501 NW2d 9.

In case involving question of whether defendant passenger in vehicle stopped for equipment violation could challenge lawfulness of vehicle stop, use of term "standing" did not serve any useful analytical purpose, since Fourth Amendment rights are personal and cannot be vicariously asserted. State v Howard (1993) 176 Wis 2d 921, 501 NW2d 9.

Appropriate analysis for determining whether defendant can challenge search or seizure focuses on defendant's rights under Fourth Amendment, and requires determination of whether disputed search and seizure has infringed defendant's Fourth Amendment interest. State v Howard (1993) 176 Wis 2d 921, 501 NW2d 9.

§ 647 --Fifth Amendment violation

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Although individuals who are not personally the victims of illegal government activity generally cannot assert the constitutional rights of others, a violation of another person's Fifth Amendment rights may rise to the level of a violation of a defendant's rights to a fair trial when the government seeks a conviction through use of evidence obtained by extreme coercion or torture. ⁷⁴ Thus, a defendant has standing to assert his or her own Fifth Amendment right to a fair trial as a valid objection to the introduction of statements extracted from a nondefendant by coercion or other inquisitional tactics. ⁷⁵ The issue is whether the government's investigation methods resulted in a fundamentally unfair trial. ⁷⁶

§ 648 Motion and response, generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

A motion to suppress evidence must set forth allegations of relevant factual issues with definiteness, clarity, and specificity. 77 A motion which contains general and conclusory factual allegations, or allegations based upon suspicion and conjecture, is not sufficient. 78

A defendant is required to make factual allegations which, if established, would warrant relief. 79 Since the purpose of a hearing on a motion to suppress is to resolve disputed issues of fact, 80 the court is not required to hold a hearing if this standard is not met. 81 The absence of any meaningful statement of facts by the defendant in support of a motion to suppress prejudices the prosecution in its preparation for the motion, and also hinders the court's research in advance of the hearing. The rule that no suppression hearing is warranted where there is no dispute as to material facts is meant to avoid the time-consuming taking of testimony solely for the purpose of affording defense counsel additional discovery, and an opportunity to examine State's witnesses in advance of trial. 82

If a hearing is ordered, the fact that the suppression motion was general does not constitute a waiver of the objection if the motion was timely and the activities of the officers were fully revealed during the course of the hearing. 83

There are five requirements for a sufficient motion for a mandatory hearing 84 based on allegations that the probable cause finding supporting a warrant was dependent on a false statement knowingly and intentionally, or with reckless disregard for the truth, included by the affiant in the warrant affidavit:

- (1) the defendant must allege specifically which portions of the warrant affidavit are claimed to be false;
- (2) the defendant must contend that false statements or omissions were deliberately or recklessly made;
- (3) a detailed offer of proof, including affidavits, must accompany the allegations;
- (4) the veracity of only the affiant must be challenged; and
- (5) the challenged statements must be necessary to define probable cause. 85

◆ Caution: A defendant must state in the suppression motion all grounds upon which a motion to suppress could be based, since a trial court is justified in refusing to hear a new ground for suppression raised for the first time during trial. 86

The judge who signs a search warrant should not rule on a defendant's subsequent motion to suppress the evidence seized thereunder. Rather, the judge should recuse on the motion to suppress. It is inappropriate for a trial judge to rule upon the validity of a search warrant which he or she has issued. 87

§ 649 --In wiretapping cases

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

In order to obtain the suppression of evidence obtained through the use of an electronic, mechanical, or other eavesdropping device in violation of the Constitution, laws, or regulations of the United States, one must invoke the procedures specified by the appropriate federal statute. This requires that an aggrieved party must claim evidence is inadmissible because it is the primary product of an unlawful interception or because it was obtained by the exploitation of an unlawful interception. 88

Assuming that a sufficient claim of wiretapping has been filed, 89 the statute requires that the opponent affirm or deny the occurrence of the alleged unlawful act. 90 It has been held that in a federal proceeding, the Federal Government is required to affirm or deny a claim, but that a local police agency is not required to file a response if there is no connection between the local agency and the federal investigation. 91 The requirement that the government affirm or deny the occurrence of illegal electronic surveillance is, as a general rule, only satisfied by affidavits, and affidavits in opposition are inadequate where they are not based on first-hand knowledge. 92

The sufficiency of the government's response is to be measured against the sufficiency of the claim of wiretapping. 93

§ 650 Hearing and determination, generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

A full suppression hearing is not mandatory in every case in which a motion is made for the suppression of evidence, 94 and such a hearing need not be granted if the motion papers are not sufficient and factual matters are not raised. 95

The Fourth Amendment requires that a hearing be held at the defendant's request where the defendant makes a substantial preliminary showing that a false statement knowingly and intentionally, or with reckless disregard for the truth, was included by the affiant in the warrant affidavit, and if the allegedly false statement was necessary to the finding of probable cause. 96 Although there is a presumption of validity with respect to the affidavit supporting the search warrant and allegations of negligence or innocent mistake are insufficient, an evidentiary hearing is mandatory where the challenger's attack is more than conclusory and is supported by more than a mere desire to cross-examine. 97 If, when material that is the subject of the alleged falsity or reckless disregard is set to one side, there remains sufficient content in a warrant affidavit to support a finding of probable cause, no hearing is required, but if the remaining content is insufficient, the defendant is entitled to a hearing. 98

Assuming that a timely suppression motion has been filed, 99 the trial court has the discretion to defer consideration of the motion until trial, so long as this action does not affect the government's right to appeal. 1 A court also has the discretion to refuse to conduct a suppression hearing after a trial has begun, 2 or even when a trial was about to begin, if the hearing would delay the trial. 3

A ruling on a pretrial motion to suppress evidence becomes a controlling rule of law in the case, and a litigant is not required and should not be permitted to renew his contention at trial if the matter had been settled in the pretrial order. 4

Questions relating to the competency of evidence obtained by an alleged illegal search and seizure are generally considered to be legal questions for the court and not for the jury. 5 In particular, the legality of a search warrant is considered to be a question of law to be determined by the court without a jury, 6 especially where there is no dispute over the evidence. 7

Where the trial court elects to bifurcate a suppression hearing, grants the defendant's motion on the first ground presented, and is subsequently reversed on appeal, the reviewing court should remand to the trial court for disposition of the alternate grounds for suppression. 8

§ 650 ----Hearing and determination, generally [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

District court improperly exercised its sanctioning discretion for violation of Jencks Act by suppressing use of two government witnesses' testimony after court had declared a mistrial; additional sanction was not necessary or appropriate, where court did not find intentional wrongdoing on government's part, and failed to find prejudice in its second ruling. United States v McKoy (1996, CA9 Nev) 78 F3d 446, 96 CDOS 1416, 96 Daily Journal DAR 2435.

The trial judge did not err in allowing a suppression hearing to continue in the absence of accused's counsel, where co-defendant's counsel handled questioning of the lone witness, accused was not put in the position of having to represent himself, and accused was not prejudiced by counsel's absence. Stein v State (1994, Fla) 632 So 2d 1361, 19 FLW S 32, related proceeding (Fla) 632 So 2d 1368, 19 FLW S 35 and petition for certiorari filed (May 16, 1994).

Defendant is not entitled to a new suppression hearing simply because the State failed to call all material witnesses at the suppression hearing. People v Hudson (1993) 157 Ill 2d 401, 193 Ill Dec 128, 626 NE2d 161, reh den (Jan 31, 1994).

Trial court erred in suppressing evidence (stolen tools) found in rented garage by landlord looking for tools to repair snowblower with which he was clearing tenant's driveway, where search warrant was supported by landlord's hearsay eyewitness account of discovery of tools, since nonconfidential eyewitness informants' statements are presumed to be reliable. State v Peck (1994, Iowa App) 517 NW2d 230.

Trial court in child-neglect prosecution properly suppressed statements made during pre-arrest interview at defendant's home, where social worker had called to request interview in response to child-abuse hotline tip, worker insisted on immediate interview, police officer accompanied social worker and participated in interview, and investigation had already focused on defendant. State v Hosto- Worthy (1994, Mo App) 877 SW2d 150.

Defendant should not be collaterally estopped to relitigate, at new Huntley hearing, issue of whether his statements with regard to second murder charge were product of coercion during combined interrogation, even though issue was same as that considered in first Huntley hearing during first murder prosecution, where he did not have full and fair opportunity to litigate issue in that he might have been deterred from testifying regarding first charge because he had argument for suppression that did not depend on his testimony, i.e., at conclusion of videotaping regarding second murder charge, he invoked his right to remain silent, which he claimed attached to subsequent videotaping regarding first murder charge. People v Aguilera (1993) 82 NY2d 23, 603 NYS2d 392, 623 NE2d 519.

Matter would be remanded for suppression hearing where (1) defendant was charged with weapon possession after third parties took briefcase from closet in defendant's apartment and opened briefcase, revealing guns to police officers, (2) defendant moved to suppress guns, and (3) although conference on motion was held, no further proceedings with respect to motion were conducted; court was required either to summarily grant or deny motion or to conduct hearing since defendant raised constitutional issues and sufficiently asserted privacy interest, and record did not indicate that defendant waived his right to hearing. People v Cole (1992, 3d Dept) 187 AD2d 873, 590 NYS2d 542.

§ 651 --Closure of hearing to public

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

The Sixth Amendment right to a public trial is applicable to a suppression hearing, and thus any closure of a suppression hearing over the objections of the accused must meet the tests for closure of a trial. 9 Although under certain circumstances, an interest in protecting the privacy of persons not before the court may justify closing portions of a suppression hearing to the public, the party seeking to close the hearing must advance an overriding interest that is likely to be prejudiced, the closure must be no broader than necessary to protect that interest, and the trial court must consider reasonable alternatives to closure and must make findings adequate to support the closure. 10

Violation of an accused's Sixth and Fourteenth Amendment rights to a public trial through closure of an entire suppression hearing, at which the accused sought to exclude wiretaps and evidence seized during resulting searches, entitles the accused to relief without any requirement that the accused prove specific prejudice. However, the remedy should be appropriate to the violation and need not include a new trial after a new suppression hearing unless the new public suppression hearing results in the suppression of material evidence not suppressed at the first trial, or in some other material change in the positions of the parties. The extent to which the new suppression hearing must be open to the public is to be determined in light of the conditions at the time of the new hearing, giving consideration only to interests that justify closure at that time. 11

§ 652 --Evidence or affidavits

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

A motion to suppress may be supported by an affidavit, and the court has the inherent power to require that supporting affidavits be filed. 12 However, affidavits need not be filed if not required by court order or local rule, and the affidavits are not a substitute for competent proof when factual issues are properly raised. 13

In a case where it is alleged that a confession was coerced and should not be admitted into evidence at trial, the defendant is entitled to a full evidentiary hearing in order to explore the factual context in which the confession was given. 14

An evidentiary hearing is not required where a defendant contests the facial validity of a wiretap application or order, since such matters must be determined from the relevant papers, and additional testimony is not likely to be relevant. 15 However, if it appears that the application and interception order are facially sufficient, and the defendant attacks the accuracy of information contained in the application, the defendant must allege that the government is guilty of a deliberate falsehood or a reckless disregard for the truth, and must accompany those allegations by an offer of proof by means of affidavits or sworn statements of witnesses. 16

§ 652 --Evidence or affidavits [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Defendants' motion to strike suppression hearing testimony of police officer would be denied where it did not allege that transcripts or tape recordings of any dispatches to or from police officer actually were made, that they were destroyed if in fact they existed, or whether contents if they existed would have been materially favorable to defendants' cross-examination of officer. United States v Florack (1994, WD NY) 155 FRD 49.

§ 653 --Burden of proof

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

A defendant has the initial burden of showing standing—some privacy interest which has been violated by the government. 17 A defendant also has the burden of establishing a prima facie case showing that the evidence was obtained in violation of the United States Constitution or statutes. 18

However, once illegal governmental activities have come to light, and the defendant has gone forward with some specific evidence demonstrating a taint, the government has the ultimate burden of showing that its evidence was not tainted by such illegality. 19 Thus, once a defendant has demonstrated a warrantless search or seizure and adequately clarified that the ground upon which he challenges its legality is lack of probable cause, the prosecutor bears the burden of proof, including the burden of going forward with evidence, on the issue of whether probable cause existed for the search or seizure. 20 The government also has the burden of showing that a warrantless search was conducted pursuant to consent, and that the consent was voluntary and uncoerced. 21

§ 653 --Burden of proof [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

District Court erred in placing burden of proof on defendant during suppression hearing to show that police officer's warrantless search of his car after traffic stop violated Fourth Amendment, since, after it was established that stop and search were without warrant and it was shown that defendant had standing, burden then shifted to government to justify search. United States v Chavis (1995, CA5 Tex) 48 F3d 871.

Court should have granted suppression of evidence of defendant's car, which was retrieved by police as result of information supplied by defendant in statements which had been properly suppressed, since it was not shown that car would inevitably have been discovered irrespective of initial wrong. People v Lavin (1992, 2d Dept) 182 AD2d 710, 582 NYS2d 478, app den 80 NY2d 834, 587 NYS2d 918, 600 NE2d 645, habeas corpus den (ED NY) 1993 US Dist LEXIS 9127.

§ 654 Disposition of motion

--

A pretrial motion, which would include a suppression motion, must be determined before the trial unless the court, for good cause, orders that the motion be deferred for determination at the trial of the general issue or until after the verdict, except where a party's right to appeal is adversely affected. 22

If factual issues are involved in determining the motion, the court must state its essential findings on the record. 23 The verbatim record must include such findings of fact and conclusions of law as are made orally. 24

§ 654 ----Disposition of motion [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

District Court erred in suppressing evidence found in pickup truck of narcotics defendant, who was lawfully in police custody, without first ruling on voluntariness of his consent to search truck. United States v McCurdy (1994, CA10 NM) 40 F3d 1111.

Trial court properly found that defendant abandoned his automobile and properly denied defendant's motion to suppress evidence seized from it, where defendant fled country; removed automobile's license plates so that it could not be driven legally and was no longer readily identifiable as property of defendant; and left automobile on street for days without moving it; defendant could not claim reasonable expectation of privacy in automobile's contents. State v Sivri (1994) 231 Conn 115, 646 A2d 169.

Motion to suppress gun as product of unlawful search and seizure would be denied where police officer, responding to radio run specifically complaining of "man with a gun," arrived on scene and observed 3 men, including defendant, standing near vehicle with vinyl bag on its trunk and holster on ground nearby, and after men furtively stepped back from holster, patted outside of bag, revealing outline of gun, since officer could be said to have reasonably feared for his safety and thus, under circumstances, was justified in patting outside of bag. People v Harmon (1990) 149 Misc 2d 337, 563 NYS2d 1006.

§ 655 Appeal by defendant or aggrieved party, generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

An order denying a motion to suppress is interlocutory and cannot be immediately appealed by a defendant, whether the motion is made before detention or arrest, 25 before indictment, 26 or after an indictment is handed down. 27 Where the criminal process is already in motion, it cannot be interrupted by an appeal on the motion to suppress, and a ruling on a motion to suppress cannot be regarded as an independent proceeding. 28 Generally, only a motion to have seized evidence returned, not a motion to suppress its use at trial, is sufficiently independent of the criminal proceeding so as to be separately appealable. 29

In passing on the correctness of a trial court's denial of a criminal defendant's motion to suppress, the reviewing court may consider the evidence introduced at the pretrial suppression hearing. 30 It has also been held that the reviewing court may also consider evidence adduced at trial, even though it may not have been presented at the pretrial hearing. 31

The harmless error rule has been applied in search and seizure cases. 32 The test of whether a violation of the Fourth Amendment exclusionary rule may be treated as harmless error is whether the erroneously admitted evidence might have contributed to the defendant's conviction. 33 If this is the case, a reversal is necessary, even if there is sufficient other evidence to support the conviction. 34

§ 655 ----Appeal by defendant or aggrieved party, generally [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Court would review defendant's challenge to constitutionality of search for plain error where he failed to challenge it at district court level; when officer asked defendant to step out of car, defendant consented to search of vehicle, and neither officer's testimony nor any argument made by defense counsel suggested that police used coercive tactics to gain defendant's consent. United States v Perrin (1995, CA4 Va) 45 F3d 869.

District court did not commit plain error in rejecting defendant's motion to suppress heroin found in his boot as incident of weapons search; defendant did not clearly present to district court two-pronged issue of whether officer was justified in reaching into defendant's boot after detecting bulge in it and, if so, whether officer was justified in removing package, and court did rule that officer was justified in searching for weapons to protect himself and that events occurring after that were recognized to be drug find, which gave officer probable cause to make reasonable inquiry as to what package was and to search it by making small incision in it. United States v Maldonado (1995, CA5 Tex) 42 F3d 906.

Court of Appeals had no jurisdiction to hear defendant van passenger's claim that statement that he owned bag, which was found in van and to which drug detection dog alerted after state trooper had stopped van for speeding and other incriminating evidence had been found, should be suppressed because it was product of illegal arrest without probable cause, where claim was raised for first time on appeal from defendant's conviction and thus was waived, and, moreover, claim did not satisfy standard for plain error; similarly, Court of Appeals would not consider codefendant's claim that bag should not have been opened because it was closed container and canine signal did not justify opening it, where claim was not raised in District Court and did not satisfy standard for plain error. United States v Critton (1995, CA6 Ohio) 43 F3d 1089.

Defendant, on appeal from District Court's denial of his motion to suppress, waived his right to have Court of Appeals consider his challenge to warrant to search his duffel bag at airport where he failed to raise matter before District Court. United States v Dixon (1995, CA8 Mo) 51 F3d 1376.

In reviewing circuit's denial of motion to suppress and circuit court's conclusion that search was reasonable, supreme court will uphold circuit court's findings of historical or evidentiary fact unless they are against great weight and clear preponderance of evidence. In Interest of Isiah B. (1993, App) 176 Wis 2d 639, 500 NW2d 637, cert den (US) 62 USLW 3250.

§ 656 --De novo versus deferential review

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Motions to suppress are generally reviewed de novo. 35 Review of the motion to suppress is a mixed question of law and fact, and although findings of fact are reviewed under a clearly erroneous standard, the application of the law to those facts is subject to the de novo standard of review. 36 Accordingly, the issue of the objective reasonableness of police officers' reliance on a search warrant under the good-faith exception to the exclusionary rule is reviewable de novo on appeal, 37 even though the findings of underlying facts upon which that determination is based are binding on appeal unless clearly erroneous. 38 Similarly, where the facts are not in dispute, the question of standing is reviewable de novo on appeal. 39 The denial of an evidentiary hearing based on allegations challenging the veracity of a warrant affidavit is reviewed de novo. 40

§ 657 Appeal by prosecution

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

In federal court, the prosecution may appeal from a decision or order of a District Court suppressing or excluding evidence in a criminal proceeding, not made after the defendant has been put in jeopardy and before the verdict or finding on an indictment or information. 41

The prosecution's appeal is limited to the propriety of the suppression order, although the court may consider other arguments brought by the defendant which support the propriety of the suppression order. 42 However, if the determination of a suppression motion was based on the District Court's determination of credibility, such as where there is a dispute over whether the defendant consented to the search, this determination of credibility is not subject to appellate review. 43

Consistent with the ordinary rule of appellate procedure, the government's challenges to the defendant's standing may be rejected where the government failed to raise the issue before the District Court. 44 Furthermore, the government may forfeit its opportunity to challenge the standing of defendants when it has made contrary assertions in the court below, when it has acquiesced in contrary findings by that court, or when it has failed to raise such question in a timely fashion during the litigation. 45 The government's conduct requires forfeiture, and constitutes something more than mere waiver, where the government induces the defendants to forgo the opportunity to establish their legitimate expectations of privacy in the District Court and then, on appeal, seeks to have the appellate court decline to decide the merits of the defendants' appeal because they failed to establish the requisite nexus between their personal privacy interests and the government's assertedly illegal activity. 46

The Federal Government is authorized to appeal an order suppressing evidence which the government intends to use in a pending federal criminal trial, provided that the appeal is taken within 30 days after the decision has been rendered. 47 Where the government has filed a motion with the trial court to reconsider the suppression order, the 30-day period runs from the date of the trial court's order denying the motion to reconsider, and not from the date of the initial suppression order. 48

§ 657 ----Appeal by prosecution [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Court of Appeals lacked jurisdiction over defendants' cross-appeal from order granting in part defendants' motion to suppress evidence, since 18 USCS § 3731, which permits government to take immediate appeal from order granting pretrial motion to suppress, does not provide for cross-appeal by defendant; defendants may raise as part of government's appeal any alternative arguments which would have supported order of suppression, but they may not assert those arguments as part of separate appeals or raise any arguments as to evidence not ordered suppressed by district court. United States v Shameizadeh (1994, CA6) 41 F3d 266.

Court of Appeals had jurisdiction over government's appeal of trial court's suppression order, because, as defendant acknowledged, suppressed evidence contained substantial proof of fact material to espionage charges under 18 USCS § 3731; standard to determine whether evidence is material is not whether evidence has potential for increasing defendant's term of incarceration, but whether evidence would be persuasive to reasonable trier of fact in establishing proposition for which government seeks to admit it. United States v Poulsen (1994, CA9 Cal) 41 F3d 1330, 94 CDOS 9349, 94 Daily Journal DAR 17306.

1. In General [658-660]

§ 658 Design of hearsay rules

View Entire Section Go to Parallel Reference Table Go to Supplement
--

Under the hearsay rule, out-of-court statements are traditionally excluded because they lack the conventional indicia of reliability: they are usually not made under oath or under circumstances that impress the declarant with the solemnity of his or her statements; the declarant's word is not subject to cross-examination; and the declarant is not available so that his or her demeanor and credibility may be assessed by the jury. 49 The hearsay rule is based on concerns which arise when an out-of-court statement is offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted; the trier of fact must then depend on the veracity of an out-of-court declarant to establish a material fact. 50 The hearsay rule does not prevent a witness from testifying as to what he heard; instead it is a restriction on the proof of facts through extrajudicial statements. 51

The approach to hearsay adopted in the Federal Rules of Evidence 52 is that of the common law: a general rule excluding hearsay evidence with exceptions under which evidence is admissible although it constitutes hearsay. 53 The Uniform Rules of Evidence follow the same approach. 54

§ 658 ----Design of hearsay rules [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

The trial court did not err in a prosecution for multiple offenses including arson where defendant's teacher had testified for the State that she smelled petroleum on defendant's bookbag and clothes two days after the fire and the court would not let defendant question the teacher on cross-examination as to the explanation defendant gave when she questioned him. The testimony of the teacher as to what the defendant had told her was hearsay and does not come within any exception to the hearsay rule. State v Beamer (1994) 339 NC 477, 451 SE2d 190.

There was no merit to defendant's contention that the trial court allowed inadmissible hearsay into evidence, since one statement was offered for the non-hearsay purpose of impeaching defendant's brother and to explain conduct of investigating officers, and another statement merely confirmed what the jury had already heard. State v Westall (1994) 116 NC App 534, 449 SE2d 24, review den 338 NC 671, 453 SE2d 185.

§ 659 Hearsay ordinarily inadmissible; exceptions

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Unless hearsay falls within one of the exceptions to the hearsay rule, it is inadmissible as evidence. 55 Courts have long imposed exceptions on the hearsay rule based on considerations of necessity for the evidence and the trustworthiness of the statements. 56 In addition, hearsay may be admissible under express statutory exceptions. 57

The same approach is taken under the Federal and Uniform Rules of Evidence. 58

The admissibility of hearsay evidence in criminal prosecutions is limited by the constitutional right of a defendant to be confronted with the witnesses against him. 59

Absent special statutes or regulations requiring administrative agencies to comply with the rules of evidence observed in the courts, hearsay is admissible in agency proceedings. 60

§ 659 ----Hearsay ordinarily inadmissible; exceptions [SUPPLEMENT]

Practice Aids: Admissibility of statements made for purposes of medical diagnosis or treatment as hearsay exception under Rule 803(4) of the Uniform Rules of Evidence. 38 ALR5th 433.

Case authorities:

Newspaper article describing explosive nature of taxi drivers' strike in San Juan was admissible, not for truth of matter asserted, but as tending to establish that defendant hotel management knew or should have known of strike's volatile nature and taken precautions to avoid harm to hotel guests whom it transported to and from airport during strike. Coyne v Taber Partners I (1995, CA1 Puerto Rico) 53 F3d 454.

In prosecution for bank fraud and money laundering arising out of scheme to process telemarketing charges, admission of cooperating conspirator's testimony regarding two merchant account holders and one telemarketer that he allegedly recruited was inadmissible hearsay since there was no showing that conspiracy existed, but error was harmless since it was merely cumulative. United States v Brown (1994, CA7 Ill) 31 F3d 484.

Physician's statement that, eight days before she was murdered, patient identified her estranged husband as person who raped her was admissible as pertinent to physician's treatment of her since he testified that identity of assailant was important to his recommendation regarding patient's after-care, including appropriate counseling, but patient's statement that husband had threatened to kill her if he caught her with another man was not admissible under any hearsay exception. United States v Joe (1993, CA10

In action for wrongful death of apartment tenants who died from carbon monoxide poisoning from allegedly defective gas heater and ventilation pipe, hearsay testimony by witness regarding telephone calls made by tenant, in witness' presence, to report gas odor in apartment was not admissible under notice exception to hearsay rule, where critical element sought to be proved was whether tenant had given notice of gas leak to apartment management, but there was no evidence to establish identity of individual tenant spoke with at time witness overheard tenant make calls. Avon-Avalon, Inc. v Collins (1994, Ala) 643 So 2d 570.

Even if hearsay testimony was not used to prove the truth of the matter asserted, the inherently prejudicial effect of admitting into evidence an out-of-court statement relating accusatory information to establish the logical sequence of events outweighed the probative value of such evidence, where accused was convicted of armed burglary, 3 counts of sexual battery with a deadly weapon, and armed robbery with a firearm, and although a police dispatch report indicating that an unidentified informant had called to report that a man with a rifle was chasing a female down the street was admitted to show why the officer had been dispatched to the scene, the State linked the report with other evidence to establish that accused had used a rifle to commit the offenses, because the contents of the statement were not relevant to establish a logical sequence of events, nor was the reason why officers arrived at the scene a material issue in the case. Conley v State (1993, Fla) 620 So 2d 180, 18 FLW S 298.

Daughter's hearsay statement was not admissible during murder prosecution to prove rape, where accused who was convicted of murdering his wife and a man who husband believed had raped her and was sentenced to death contended that his daughter should have been allowed to testify that wife had told daughter that she had been raped by the man husband murdered, because the statement was never communicated to accused by either wife or daughter, admission of the statement was prohibited by FS § 90.802, and the statement fell within no known exception to the hearsay rule. Cannady v State (1993, Fla) 620 So 2d 165, 18 FLW S 277.

The hearsay testimony of a police dispatch report was erroneously admitted into evidence, where accused was convicted of armed burglary, 3 counts of sexual battery with a deadly weapon, and armed robbery with a firearm, and although the dispatch report indicating that an unidentified informant had called to report that a man with a rifle was chasing a female down the street was admitted to show why the officer had been dispatched to the scene, the State linked the report with other evidence to establish that accused had used a rifle to commit the offenses, because regardless of the purpose for which the State said the evidence was offered, it was used to prove the truth of the matter asserted. Conley v State (1993, Fla) 620 So 2d 180, 18 FLW S 298.

The hearsay testimony of a police dispatch report was erroneously admitted into evidence, where accused was convicted of armed burglary, 3 counts of sexual battery with a deadly weapon, and armed robbery with a firearm, and although the dispatch report indicating that an unidentified informant had called to report that a man with a rifle was chasing a female down the street was admitted to show why the officer had been dispatched to the scene, the State linked the report with other evidence to establish that accused had used a rifle to commit the offenses, because regardless of the purpose for which the State said the evidence was offered, it was used to prove the truth of the matter asserted. Conley v State (1993, Fla) 620 So 2d 180, 18 FLW S 298.

The trial court improperly admitted certain highly prejudicial hearsay statements made by child victims and the boyfriend of victims' mother, where accused was convicted of multiple counts of lewd assault in the presence of a minor under 16 and sexual battery upon a minor under 12, and the court allowed the state to introduce at trial a tape recording made by boyfriend of an interview with the victims which contained highly prejudicial statements, purportedly as nonhearsay prior consistent statements of victims offered to rebut accused's theory that boyfriend had manipulated the victims to make false statements against accused, because the recording was not made before a motive to fabricate existed, and the statements were made to the very person accused of manipulation. LeBlanc v State (1993, Fla App D3) 619 So 2d 1021, 18 FLW D 952, corrected, remanded (Fla App D3) 18 FLW D 1369.

Merely because statement suffers some impediment under one hearsay exception does not preclude proponent of evidence from satisfying court that different, better- fitting exception fully applies. People v Buie (1995) 86 NY2d 501, 634 NYS2d 415, 658 NE2d 192.

Defendant's hearsay statement to his girlfriend on the same day he confessed to the police that he had shot a gun but had not shot anyone was not admissible under the principle that, when the State offers part of a confession, the accused may require the entire confession to be admitted into evidence where defendant's statement to his girlfriend was not made at the same time as the confession and was not a part of the confession, and the State did not attempt to introduce testimony concerning defendant's self- serving declaration and thus did not open the door to its admission. State v Jackson (1995) 340 NC 301, 457 SE2d 862.

§ 660 --Effect of other statutes on Federal Rules of Evidence

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

The hearsay rules are not to conflict with the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure providing, for example, for the use of depositions in civil cases in the proceedings in which they were taken, especially when the deponent is more than 100 miles from the place of trial, 61 or for the admissibility of affidavits in connection with motions, 62 including those for summary judgment, 63 new trials, 64 and relief from a judgment or order. 65

The rule also does not conflict with Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure where they provide, for example, for the use of depositions in the proceedings in which they were taken; 66 the admissibility of affidavits to show probable cause for arrest warrants; 67 or the admissibility of affidavits in connection with pretrial 68 and posttrial 69 motions.

The Rules of Bankruptcy are likewise unaffected. 70

Among those statutes permitting receipt of hearsay evidence are statutes providing for: the admissibility of depositions; 71 the admissibility of affidavits; 72 and the admissibility of official records. 73

Some statutes and rules may be said to require exclusion of out-of-court statements as to which the hearsay rules would remove any hearsay objection, such as provisions stating that advance payment for claims in connection with military death or injury does not constitute admission by the government of liability for the accident, 74 or that a finding by the court that the defendant is mentally competent to stand trial will not be admissible as evidence in a trial for the offense charged. 75

2. What Constitutes Hearsay Within Exclusionary Rule [661-667]

§ 661 Hearsay defined

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Hearsay is evidence of a statement which is made other than by a witness while testifying at the hearing, offered to prove the truth of the matter stated. 76 This rule is adopted in both the Federal Rules and the Uniform Rules of Evidence. 77 To constitute hearsay (1) the statement 78 must be an out-of-court statement, as distinct from the declarant's 79 original testimony at a trial or hearing, 80 and (2) the out-of-court statement must be offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted. 81 Even if the proponent of the testimony is the declarant himself, the testimony constitutes hearsay where the declarant is present in the courtroom but does not testify. 82

If the out-of-court statement is being offered for a purpose other than proving the truth of the matter asserted, it is not hearsay. 83 If no nonhearsay use is available to the proponent, the out-of-court statement will be excludible, 84 unless the statement can be fitted to one of the hearsay exceptions. 85

§ 661 ----Hearsay defined [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Customs agent's testimony of her interview with two coconspirators was hearsay, notwithstanding that jury was not told exactly what words declarants had spoken, since testimony conveyed substance of what they said—namely that defendant was involved, agent's state of mind as investigation progressed was irrelevant, any explanation why agent had investigated defendant was amply explained by fact that his address had been used by coconspirators and appeared on matchbook in coconspirator's possession, defendant did not engage in any tactics that would justify rebuttal through state-of-mind evidence, coconspirators' statements addressed most important disputed issue in trial by directly implicating defendant, coconspirators did not testify so defendant had no opportunity to discredit their declarations to agent by cross-examination, and limiting instructions were unlikely to prevent jury from considering declarations for their truth. United States v Reyes (1994, CA2 Conn) 18 F3d 65, 38 Fed Rules Evid Serv 1367.

Co-worker's telephone message stating that defendant's employee had told her that foreclosure notice was being served on plaintiff's wife was not hearsay since it was not offered to prove that plaintiff was married or that notice of foreclosure was being served on his wife, but to prove that improper information was conveyed to third person in violation of Fair Debt Collection Practices Act, and therefore admissible in support of summary judgment motion. Committe v Dennis Reimer Co., L.P.A. (1993, DC Vt) 150 FRD 495.

Evidence in trademark infringement suit that unidentified person at trade show remarked on similarity of parties' fiberglass pipes was properly excluded as hearsay. Smith Fiberglass Prods. v Ameron, Inc. (1993, CA7 Wis) 7 F3d 1327, 28 USPQ2d 1614, reh den (CA7) 1993 US App LEXIS 31897.

Hearsay is permitted in sentencing proceedings to prevent them from becoming full-blown trial with endless parade of witnesses, but sentencing court may only rely on hearsay when it is reliable and defendant has reasonable opportunity to rebut contested hearsay. United States v McGill (1994, CA7 Ind) 32 F3d 1138.

Discharged employee's affidavit is not admissible in opposition to motion for summary judgment, where employee claimed that he was discharged for violation of attendance program, but white employees were allowed to use retroactive vacation days to avoid discharge for violation of attendance program, affidavit contains report of employee's conversation with white employee, and reports assertions made by white employee, because employee offered assertions of white employee to prove their truth, so the affidavit contains hearsay and is inadmissible under FRE 801. Cornelius v Hondo Inc. (1994, ND Ill) 843 F Supp 1243, 64 BNA FEP Cas 124.

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding drug coconspirator's prior testimony at detention hearing as hearsay where it credited government's contention that it did not have similar motive to develop coconspirator's testimony by cross-examination at detention hearing as it would have had at trial. United States v Fischl (1994, CA8 Minn) 16 F3d 927, reh, en banc, den sub nom United States v Main (CA8) 1994 US App LEXIS 5490.

Insured's statements to his father, sister and others about his desire to change beneficiary on his life insurance policy following his divorce were inadmissible hearsay in sister's action against insurance company for agent's alleged failure to provide change of beneficiary forms, since they were only relevant to show that deceased wished to change his beneficiary or asked agent to do so and thus were offered for truth of matter asserted. Barnes v Prudential Ins. Co. of Am. (1996, CA8 Mo) 76 F3d 889.

Certificate of insurance admitted to prove insured status of financial institution is not hearsay, since it falls outside definition of hearsay, being written statement memorializing fact of legal relationship between insurer and insured, which affects legal rights of parties or is circumstance bearing on conduct affecting their rights. United States v Bellucci (1993, CA9 Cal) 995 F2d 157, 93 CDOS 4067, 93 Daily Journal DAR 6950.

In personal injury action arising out of hit-and-run accident, trial court improperly admitted statement made by anonymous witness on police report under catchall or residual exception to hearsay rule, where, pursuant to applicable statute, statement could only be admitted if there was adequate basis to believe that statement was reliable and trustworthy, and this standard was not met since witness was not witness at trial and not available for cross-examination, and record and did not include any information that would have enabled court to determine trustworthiness and reliability of statement of anonymous witness. O'Shea v Mignone (1994) 35 Conn App 828, 647 A2d 37, app den 231 Conn 938.

Trial court in prosecution for use of weapon properly excluded defense-proffered tape recording of telephone conversation between victim and defendant's former girlfriend, where recording contained inadmissible hearsay as well as admissible evidence, but defendant made no effort to present only admissible portions of recording. State v Griffin (1993, Mo App) 859 SW2d 816.

The trial court did not err in a prosecution for murder, robbery, and conspiracy by admitting testimony that an accomplice had told the witness the morning after the murder and robbery that he thought the victim had more money than they had found, that she should say she did not know anything about the shooting if anyone asked, and that she would go to jail and lose her children if she did not so. The testimony was not introduced for the truth of the statement but to again explain why the witness did not report the offense in a more timely manner. The testimony that the victim had less money than expected could not have been too prejudicial because it added little to the testimony of this witness and did not rise to the level of a fundamental error affecting the basic fairness of the trial. G.S. § 8C-1, Rule 801(c). State v Lamb (1995) 342 NC 151, 463 SE2d 189.

Hearsay is statement, other than one made by declarant, offered into evidence to prove truth of matter asserted (Stats § 908.01(3)). Roebke v Newell Co. (1993, App) 177 Wis 2d 624, 503 NW2d 295, review den (Wis) 508 NW2d 423.

§ 662 --"Statement"

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

A "statement" subject to the hearsay rule is (1) an oral or written assertion or (2)

nonverbal conduct of a person, if it is intended by the person as an assertion. 86 A person makes an assertion when that person speaks, writes, acts, or fails to act with the intent to convey an expression of fact or opinion. 87 The effect of the definition of "statement" is to exclude from the operation of the hearsay rule all evidence of conduct not intended as an assertion 88 and any oral statement which is not intended as an assertion. 89

Oral or written statements which directly 90 or impliedly state the matter to be proved are assertive statements excludible as hearsay. 91 For example, a newspaper article is considered hearsay evidence of the facts in the article and is inadmissible to prove those facts. 92 Where conduct is apparently nonassertive, the party seeking to exclude such conduct as hearsay bears the burden of proving that the actor intended his or her conduct to be assertive. 93

The hearsay rules do not prevent the introduction of nonassertive material, including tangible evidence such as comparison photographs 94 or police sketches of a suspect; 95 otherwise every piece of tangible evidence capable of supporting an inference could be said to be an assertion. 96 However, it has been held that a police composite sketch is hearsay: it has the same effect as if the victim had made a verbal description of the suspect's physical characteristics; the fact that the sketch is in picture form does not change the fact that it is being offered as a statement made out of court to prove what the suspect looked like. 97 Other examples of nonassertive tangible evidence include: evidence of notebooks describing drug transactions which were seized on the premises of the accused, as supporting the inference that the apartment was the scene of drug sales and related activity; 98 and bookmaking records found in the possession of a taxpayer and offered as proof that he earned money through bookmaking, and not offered to establish the truth of transactions recorded in them. 99

§ 662 --"Statement" [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Since "statement" signifies "single declaration or remark" for purposes of residual exception to hearsay rule, court must examine narrative sentence by sentence and rule upon admissibility of each single declaration or remark and determine whether it has particularized guarantees of trustworthiness, relates to material fact, and its admission furthers purposes of Rules of Evidence and interests of justice. United States v Canan (1995, CA6 Ky) 48 F3d 954, 41 Fed Rules Evid Serv 543.

Defendant charged with using communication facility to facilitate commission of federal drug crimes was not rendered ineffective assistance for counsel's failure to call his drug counselor as witness since any relevant testimony counselor could have provided was inadmissible hearsay because it consisted of statements made to counselor that were not necessary for treatment. United States v Kozinski (1994, CA7 Ill) 16 F3d 795.

Securities fraud defendant's motion in limine to exclude affidavit of deceased stockholder is denied, where defendant claims stockholder gave him stock certificate representing 35,000 shares of corporate stock to use as he saw fit, but affidavit, prepared with assistance of stock transfer agent, seeks new certificate to replace certificates lost, destroyed, or never delivered, because affidavit, although not dispositive document, is admissible under hearsay exception at FRE 803(15) for statements purporting to establish or affect interest in property. United States v Weinstock (1994, DC Utah) 863 F Supp 1529.

§ 663 --"Declarant"

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

A declarant under the hearsay rule is a person who makes a statement. 1 The declarant is to be distinguished from the witness who seeks to offer the statement at trial.

◆ Comment: An out-of-court statement which overcomes a hearsay objection may still be subject to exclusion if the declarant lacks firsthand knowledge of the matter asserted in view of FRE 602. Although FRE 602 by its terms imposes a personal knowledge requirement only upon testifying witnesses, the same requirement applies generally to hearsay declarants. 2 However, admission of testimony concerning a prior, out-of-court identification by a witness who is unable, due to memory loss, to explain the basis of the identification does not violate the Confrontation Clause or rules of evidence. 3

§ 664 Nonhearsay uses of out-of-court statements

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

A statement having probative worth simply by virtue of the fact that it was uttered, if relevant to a material fact in issue, is not hearsay and is generally admissible, unless its probative value is found to be substantially outweighed by the prejudicial effect. 4 Where a statement is not offered for the truth of the contents of the conversation, but only to show that it was made, then the statement is not hearsay. 5 For example, a statement that is offered to show its patent falsity, so as to suggest the defendant's consciousness of guilt, is not hearsay. 6 Similarly, a newspaper article could be properly admitted to evidence where the articles were not offered to prove the facts in the story, but instead were admitted to support the idea that the public was aware of the information mentioned in the articles. 7

Among the kinds of out-of-court statements that have been held admissible as having been offered for a nonhearsay purpose are—

—certain verbal acts. 8

—statements relating to a contemporaneous nonverbal act which has legal significance in itself; 9 however, a statement which, though relating to a contemporaneous act, makes an assertion about some previous condition or event is hearsay. 10

§ 664 ----Nonhearsay uses of out-of-court statements [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Hearsay statement of undercover police officer that he was forced to sniff cocaine at gunpoint was properly admitted to rehabilitate officer where defense counsel sought to discredit police officer with discrepancy between this statement and trial testimony that gun was displayed but never removed from one defendant's waistband. United States v Castillo (1994, CA2 NY) 14 F3d 802, later proceeding (CA2 NY) 1994 US App LEXIS 10932 and petition for certiorari filed (Apr 28, 1994).

Testimony of defamation plaintiff's friend that she had telephoned store where plaintiff had worked and been informed by manager that plaintiff had been terminated because of accusations that she stole money from employer was not hearsay since manager's statement was not offered for truth of matter, but to prove that manager uttered that statement. Starr v Pearle Vision (1995, CA10 Okla) 54 F3d 1548.

Coconspirator's testimony that he heard another conspirator tell defendant to take car and to make marijuana into "squares" and load it into another car was admissible for non-hearsay purpose, namely, to show effect of statements on defendant. United States v Nieto (1995, CA10 Okla) 60 F3d 1464.

Assuming that two letters defendant wrote to his girlfriend in which he set forth details concerning his contention that he had killed the victim while defending himself from a homosexual assault were admissible for corroboration under Rule 806, the trial court's exclusion of these letters was not prejudicial error since defendant was able to get into evidence that he stated in the letters that he killed in self- defense, and there is no reasonable possibility that a different verdict would have been returned if defendant had put before the jury more details of the killing as corroborative evidence. State v Lovin (1995) 339 NC 695, 454 SE2d 229.

There was no error in a first- degree murder prosecution in the admission of testimony by an officer that the mother of an absent witness had said that the witness had moved and that she did not know where the witness was. The testimony was admissible to prove the difficulty of finding the witness and was not hearsay when used for that purpose. The prosecutor's lapsus linguae in stating that the testimony was offered for the truth of the matter did not convert nonhearsay testimony to hearsay and, in any event, the testimony was so peripheral that it could not have prejudiced defendants. State v Bowie (1995) 340 NC 199, 456 SE2d 771.

The trial court did not err in a prosecution for attempted first- degree statutory rape and attempted first-degree sexual offense by allowing the State's medical expert to testify about statements the victim made to her during a physical examination. Whether the testimony fell within the medical diagnosis exception to the hearsay rule was not addressed because the statements corroborated the earlier testimony of the victim, defendant objected to the testimony "except for purposes of corroboration," and the trial court properly instructed the jury that the testimony was received only for the purpose of corroboration. State v Robertson (1994) 115 NC App 249, 444 SE2d 643.

An officer's testimony reciting the statements of two eyewitnesses that a vehicle almost ran their car off the road, that they observed the vehicle leave the road and strike a stop sign, and that they followed the vehicle to a residence and saw a man in a white shirt and blue pants exit the vehicle, fall to the ground, and then enter the residence did not constitute hearsay since the testimony was not offered to prove the truth of the matters asserted by the eyewitnesses but was offered to show the basis for the officer's reasonable belief at the time he arrested petitioner that petitioner had been driving while impaired. Melton v Hodges (1994) 114 NC App 795, 443 SE2d 83.

In narcotics prosecution, taped statements concerning drug buys were not hearsay since they were introduced not for truth of matter asserted, but, rather, to place defendant's statements in context and make them comprehensible to jury. Even if statements had been hearsay, however, they were admissible under residual hearsay exception where witness ignored subpoena and failed to appear, and trial court found that testimony of police officers supplied sufficient guarantees of trustworthiness of statements. State v Dillon (1994, W Va) 447 SE2d 583.

Police officer's testimony that the declarant, when questioned about his whereabouts, told the police essentially the same story that the defendant had told the police specifically that they were together at a bar for most of the evening and had later gone to a hotel, was not hearsay where it was offered to show that the declarant gave a false alibi that was substantially similar to that given by the defendant, rather than being offered to prove that the defendant and the declarant actually were at a bar together or went to a hotel. State v Esposito, 223 Conn 299, 613 A2d 242.

Statements of a criminal defendant and the two individuals with whom he was arrested were not considered hearsay where they were admitted only to prove that all three gave conflicting and therefore false statements when arrested. State v Hudson (Minn) 281 NW2d 870.

A statement offered to prove that a particular party made it so that the state could later prove, by other admissible evidence, that the party fabricated the statement in order to support a false claim, was not hearsay. State v Bastien (ND) 436 NW2d 229.

Testimony by store clerk that the defendant's brother had telephoned and stated that he needed some money to get the defendant out of town was admissible in a prosecution for interstate transportation of stolen money orders, where the clerk removed the money orders from the safe before the defendant and his brother arrived and attempted to hide them, since this unusual behavior was worthy of clarification by reference to the phone call. United States v Zamarripa (CA8 Mo) 544 F2d 978, 1 Fed Rules Evid Serv 454, cert den 429 US 1111, 51 L Ed 2d 566, 97 S Ct 1149.

§ 665 --Verbal acts

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

There is a category of nonhearsay designated as verbal acts or verbal conduct in which the utterance of the words is, in itself, an operative fact which gives rise to legal consequences. 17 Verbal acts may be considered nonhearsay when they comprise the operative events at issue, 18 as in cases of fraud, 19 perjury, 20 price fixing, 21 gambling, 22 prostitution, 23 or republication of libel. 24 Such statements may also be made in the process of collective bargaining. 25 Ballots cast in an election are not hearsay because the casting of a vote is a verbal act in which the statement itself has a legal effect. 26

Many crimes involve verbal acts, 27 and the words of coconspirators, if not admissible as an admission by a party-opponent, 28 may in some circumstances be admitted as verbal acts probative of the operation of a conspiracy. 29

Similarly, out of court statements may be offered to show that an agreement or contract was formed by the making of the statements, because the making of the statements gives rise to legal consequences, and the mere fact of utterance is relevant to the issue of whether or not there was an express agreement. 30

§ 666 --State of mind of listener

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Words offered to prove the effect on the hearer are admissible when they are offered to show their effect on one whose conduct is at issue. 31

When a person's knowledge or state of mind is at issue, evidence that he has heard or read a statement may be relevant, and it lies beyond reach of a hearsay objection. 32 Where reasonableness of a party's conduct is at issue, knowledge of certain statements may have probative value regardless of the truth of the statements. 33 Thus, an out-of-court statement may be offered to explain responsive conduct. 34 An out of court declaration by a third party to a police officer which is offered at trial merely to explain the officer's conduct in the investigation of a crime is usually admissible because it is not offered for the truth of the matter stated. 35 The conduct to be explained should be relevant, in need of explanation, and contemporaneous with the statements. 36 But the trial judge must sometimes exclude such proof where it contains accusations so damaging to the accused that the risk the jury will consider the words for their truth outweighs their probative value as an explanation of official conduct. 37 However, where the substance of the conversations heard by the officer could in no way go to prove any matter relevant to the trial, it is not error for part of the substance of a conversation to be revealed. 38 Further, the officer's testimony as to the substance of the motorist's tip, as opposed to only permitting the officer to state that he had information, is appropriate where the defendant has cast doubts on the officer's reasons for approaching the defendant when he did. 39

Evidence which would otherwise be hearsay may be admissible, as bearing on the state of mind of the defendant, if it is not offered for the truth of the statement. This nonhearsay use has been invoked with respect to the issue of duress, 40 authorization, 41 volition, 42 motive, 43 good faith, 44 and knowledge or belief, or the absence of knowledge. 45

§ 666 --State of mind of listener [SUPPLEMENT]Case authorities:

Sexual molestation victim's testimony about what she told police officer in out-of-court interview was inadmissible hearsay and since case was close because it was dependent almost entirely on victim's testimony, which was at times unclear and inconsistent, its admission, together with improper prosecutorial vouching by arguing that victim's testimony was consistent with her earlier out-of-court statements, was reversible error. United States v Frederick (1996, CA9 Ariz) 78 F3d 1370, 96 CDOS 1473, 96 Daily Journal DAR 2526, 43 Fed Rules Evid Serv 1156.

Testimony by an assault victim that defendants' companion yelled "shoot the mother f---er" just before defendants drew their guns and began shooting was not inadmissible hearsay since the testimony was admitted to establish why defendants began shooting and to show the context in which the shooting began. Even if the statement was hearsay, it was admissible under the "excited utterance" exception to the hearsay rule where it was made when someone with whom the companion had been arguing came toward him holding a bar chair in the air. State v Reid (1994) 335 NC 647, 440 SE2d 776.

The trial court did not err in a prosecution for first-degree murder and conspiracy by admitting testimony concerning statements made in defendant's presence from a witness who was present but did not participate and from a woman who gave the participants a ride afterwards. The statements were offered not to prove the truth of any matter asserted therein, but to explain the subsequent conduct of the defendant and his accomplices and the context in which the murder occurred. State v Morston (1994) 336 NC 381, 445 SE2d 1.

The trial court did not err in a noncapital first-degree murder prosecution by admitting the testimony of an S.B.I. agent that defendant's wife had said that defendant was at his father's home on the day defendant had promised to give the agent his gun. The testimony was not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted but rather to explain the agent's actions after he was unable to retrieve the gun from defendant although defendant had promised to deliver the gun to the police that morning. State v Corbett (1994) 339 NC 313, 451 SE2d 252.

The trial court did not err in a first-degree murder prosecution in admitting hearsay statements by the victim that she was afraid of the defendant. The conversations between the victim and the five witnesses related directly to the victim's fear of defendant and were properly admitted pursuant to the state of mind exception to the hearsay rule to show the nature of the victim's relationship with the defendant and the impact of defendant's behavior on the victim's state of mind prior to her murder. The trial court carefully weighed the probative value of the testimony against its prejudicial effect and defendant has not demonstrated any abuse of discretion. GS § 8C-1, Rule 803(3). State v Alston (1995) 341 NC 198, 461 SE2d 687.

In a murder prosecution wherein two teenage girls testified that defendant was one of the two shooters, testimony that, prior to the shooting, Corey Best had threatened to kick the girls if he found them again in the vicinity where the shooting occurred was not inadmissible hearsay because it was not offered to show that the declarant was going to hurt the girls but to explain why the girls had left the scene before the shooting and thus could not identify defendant as one of the shooters. Therefore, the trial court erred by excluding this testimony, but the error was not prejudicial where defendant was allowed to present this evidence through the testimony of other witnesses that the two girls were not at the scene during the shooting because of an argument with Corey Best. State v Burke (1995) 342 NC 113, 463 SE2d 212.

An officer was permitted to testify that he was told by a passing motorist that there was a person asleep, passed out or even dead behind the wheel of a van in a parking lot where the motorist's statement is offered to show not that the defendant in the case was asleep, passed out or dead, but was offered to prove that the officer thought he had reason to approach the defendant's van. State v Beattie, 157 Vt 162, 596 A2d 919.

§ 667 --State of mind of declarant

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

When the state of mind of the declarant is at issue, statements indicating intent and offered for the forward-looking purpose of showing conduct in conformity with that intent are admissible. 46 But with respect to statements indicating knowledge and offered for the backward-looking purpose of showing memory of a fact, it must be shown that the statement of fact is not hearsay because the matter asserted and the matter sought to be proved are not the same. 47 Alternatively, such a statement offered for a backward-looking purpose may be admitted as circumstantial evidence of the declarant's state of mind regardless of its truth. 48 When a declaration is admitted only to prove a relevant state of mind, it does not matter whether it was admitted on the grounds that it is not hearsay because it is not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted 49 or under the exception for declarations of state of mind. 50

§ 667 --State of mind of declarant [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Insurance company purchaser's correspondence with investors was properly excluded, although he had offered it to corroborate his own testimony that he was actively seeking investment financing, in attempt to rebut government's contention that he had bought company with sole intention of diverting its funds, since it was not relevant to his state of mind at time of purchase and diversion of assets 4 months prior and was cumulative and unprejudicial. United States v Newman (1995, CA1 RI) 49 F3d 1.

Testimony of sister that murder victim, as he was leaving her apartment after hanging out on night of murder, told her that he was going out to meet co- defendant will be admitted, where statement will be allowed to function as part of larger array of evidence before jury so that they may decide for themselves what weight to give it, because it constitutes statement of then existing mental or emotional condition under FRE 803(3). United States v Houlihan (1994, DC Mass) 871 F Supp 1495.

Wife's testimony regarding her deceased husband's telephone conversation which she overheard, in which he expressed his intent to make her beneficiary of his insurance policy, was admissible as evidence of insured's then- existing state of mind. Phoenix Mut. Life Ins. Co. v Adams (1994, CA4 SC) 30 F3d 554.

Testimony of decedent's wife that she overheard decedent telling unidentified person on telephone that he wanted to change beneficiary of his life insurance policy to wife are admissible in action between wife and son over proceeds of decedent's life insurance policy, because decedent's statements clearly indicated desire to change beneficiary of life insurance policy and were therefore statements of decedent's then existing state of mind. Phoenix Mut. Life Ins. Co. v Adams (1993, DC SC) 828 F Supp 379.

Witness's testimony about victim's suicide threats in months preceding her death should have been admitted under state of mind exception, even though conceivably cumulative, since exclusion violated defendants' right to put on defense, i.e., that victim who died in house fire committed suicide. United States v Veltmann (1993, CA11 Fla) 6 F3d 1483.

In prosecution of Coast Guard reserve officer for violation of conflict of interest statute, testimony about advice he had received from district legal officer and designated ethics officer was offered to show defendant's state of mind, not for truth of matter asserted, hence was not hearsay. United States v Baird (1994, App DC) 29 F3d 647.

A homicide victim's statements may be material and admissible under the state-of- mind exception to the hearsay rule, when the defendant claims self- defense and the victim's statements that he feared the defendant tend to rebut the claim, when the defendant claims the victim committed suicide and the defense can be rebutted by showing the victim's statements are inconsistent with suicide, and when the defendant claims the death was accidental and the defense can be rebutted by the victim's statements that he feared the instrument of death. Peterka v State (1994, Fla) 640 So 2d 59, 19 FLW S 232, petition for certiorari filed (Nov 2, 1994).

The trial court did not err in a noncapital first-degree murder prosecution by admitting testimony that the victim had said before her death that defendant was "very, very jealous," that "she was thinking about breaking up with him," and that she was "tired of his junk." The statements were evidence of the victim's state of mind and her state of mind regarding her relationship with defendant was relevant to show that the victim and defendant were having problems in their relationship. State v Jones (1994) 337 NC 198, 446 SE2d 32.

The trial court did not err in a first- degree murder prosecution by admitting a letter from the victim where defendant contended that the letter was erroneously admitted under the residual exception to the hearsay rule, but the letter was admissible under the state-of-mind exception to show the status of the victim's relationship with defendant. GS § 8C-1, Rule 803(c). State v Alston (1995) 341 NC 198, 461 SE2d 687.

Defendant's statement to his girlfriend, when she told him she had heard he had shot someone, that he had shot a gun but had not shot anyone was not admissible under the state of mind exception to the hearsay rule set forth in GS § 8C-1, Rule 803(3) since the statement referred to defendant's actions rather than his state of mind. State v Jackson (1995) 340 NC 301, 457 SE2d 862.

In a prosecution of defendant for the murder of her husband, testimony by two witnesses repeating statements about defendant's drug use and problems in his marriage made to them by the victim shortly before his death were admissible under the state-of-mind exception to the hearsay rule and were relevant to rebut defendant's earlier testimony characterizing her marital relationship with the victim as "fine" and "excellent." GS § 8C-1, Rule 803(3). State v Lambert (1995) 341 NC 36, 460 SE2d 123.

In an action to have a deed declared void on the ground that it was obtained by undue influence, statements made by plaintiff, who was deceased at the time of trial, were not inadmissible hearsay, since evidence of declarations of the testator which disclosed his state of mind at the time of the execution of the paper writing on the circumstances under which it was executed, tending to show that he did or did not act freely and voluntarily, is competent as substantive proof of undue influence, and all the challenged testimony here concerned plaintiff's state of mind regarding defendant and tended to show that plaintiff did not freely and voluntarily deed the remainder interest in the property to defendant. Caudill v Smith (1994) 117 NC App 64, 450 SE2d 8, review den (NC) 1995 NC LEXIS 75.

In action brought by plaintiff seeking to recover pension benefits as beneficiary under deceased mother's employee benefit plan under which benefits were payable as long as participant lived but ceased upon death, plaintiff's husband could not testify as to conversations he had with decedent who allegedly told plaintiff's husband that she wanted plaintiff to be beneficiary under plan which would have paid monthly benefits to named beneficiary for remainder of ten-year term after participant died, since statements constituted inadmissible hearsay because plaintiff sought to use them for truth of matter asserted, and statements did not fit state-of-mind or statement- of-recent perception exceptions to hearsay rule. Roebke v Newell Co. (1993, App) 177 Wis 2d 624, 503 NW2d 295, review den (Wis) 508 NW2d 423.

3. Statements Which are "Not Hearsay" [668-678]

View Entire Section Go to Parallel Reference Table Go to Supplement
--

Under certain circumstances, the prior statements of a witness fall outside the definition of hearsay and are treated as substantive evidence with respect to prior inconsistent statements, 51 prior consistent statements, 52 and prior statements of identification. 53 The common requirement for admission of these prior statements is that the declarant must testify at the trial or hearing, and that the declarant must be subject to cross-examination concerning the statement. 54

In addition, admissions by a party opponent are excluded from the scope of the hearsay rule. 55

§ 668 ----Generally [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Contemporaneous identifications are given much more credence than in-court identifications, in fact considered reliable enough to justify their exclusion from the hearsay rule, even when witness is unable to repeat identification in courtroom. Samuels v Mann (1993, CA2 NY) 13 F3d 522 (among conflicting authorities noted in Ayala v Leonardo (CA2 NY) 1994 US App LEXIS 6643).

District court in prosecution of defendant for racketeering, murder, extortion, firearms offenses and conspiracy did not err in admitting under catch-all exception hearsay testimony regarding outbreak of shooting phase of organized crime families' conflict since district court concluded that testimony provided great assurance of verity because declarants were in middle of life and death battle. United States v Orena (1994, CA2 NY) 32 F3d 704, subsequent app sub nom United States v Sessa (1994, CA2 NY) 1994 US App LEXIS 29805.

Out-of-court statements made by nontestifying codefendant which incriminated defendant charged with causing another to travel in interstate commerce with intent that murder for hire be committed were properly admitted, since they could reasonably be construed as part of attempt to induce inmate to whom they were made to help fabricate defense to charges and help them find someone to kill witness who cooperated with government in building case against defendants. United States v Shores (1994, CA4 SC) 33 F3d 438.

Murder victims' statements in months before their murders about defendant's alleged embezzlement were not hearsay because not admitted to prove truth of matter asserted, but to prove defendant's motive for hiring hit man to kill them. United States v Levine (1993, CA7 Ind) 5 F3d 1100, petition for certiorari filed (Dec 27, 1993).

Exclusion of out-of-court exculpatory statement of witness who failed to appear at trial was proper since statement was insufficiently corroborated, and lacked trustworthiness, given fact that witness gave several conflicting statements, most of which contradicted offered statement. United States v Groce (1993, CA7 Wis) 999 F2d 1189.

Although child sexual abuse victim's statements to physician about how she got hurt and who hurt her fell within medical treatment exception, similar statement to social worker did not since social worker's questions about identify of abuser were aimed at ensuring child's safety, not treating or diagnosing child's physical or psychological needs. Territory of Guam v Ignacio (1993, CA9 Cal) 10 F3d 608, 93 CDOS 8509, 93 Daily Journal DAR

Rule 801's provision that party's own admission is not hearsay does not eliminate Rule 602's requirement that witness have personal knowledge of subject matter of testimony. Gross v Burggraf Constr. Co. (1995, CA10 Wyo) 53 F3d 1531, 68 BNA FEP Cas 88.

In prosecution for sexual assault, solicitation to commit first- degree intentional homicide, and other crimes, trial court properly admitted statements of assault victim made to coworkers within few hours after victim suffered repeated and aggravated sexual assault and was threatened with death, where statements were made to first people victim talked to following incident, and people to whom victim spoke testified that victim appeared frightened, upset, and agitated. State v Boshcka (1992, App) 178 Wis 2d 628, 496 NW2d 627.

In wrongful death action by widow against hospital, hospital's internal investigative report of patient's death and written statements of hospital employees made shortly after patient's death were properly admitted into evidence, where although hospital argued that report and statements constituted hearsay and that report was privileged, statements were made by hospital employees, concerned matters within scope of their employment, and were made during their employment and, therefore, were not hearsay; and Louisiana Supreme Court had previously decided that hospital's internal investigative report was not privileged. Smith v Louisiana Health & Human Resources Admin. (1994, La App 4th Cir) 637 So 2d 1177.

§ 669 Declarant must be subject to cross-examination

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Before the prior statement of a witness may be admitted as a nonhearsay statement, the declarant must be subject to cross-examination concerning the statement while testifying at the trial or hearing. 56 A witness is regarded as subject to cross-examination when the witness is placed on the stand, is under oath, and responds willingly to questions. 57 It has been held that the witness must be subject to cross examination at the same trial or hearing in which the prior inconsistent statement is offered. 58 However, other courts have held that the purpose of the rule is not to insure that the declarant is present at the same hearing, but that the opponent had a full and fair opportunity to cross examine the declarant as to the hearsay. 59 A witness' inability to testify at the trial or hearing concerning the underlying basis of a prior identification of a person due to memory loss does not preclude a meaningful opportunity to cross-examine the witness regarding the prior identification, and the statement is admissible where the witness recalls making the prior identification. 60

§ 669 ----Declarant must be subject to cross- examination [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Testimonies of defendants at their own respective, separate state- court murder trials are admissible against themselves in subsequent, joint federal criminal trial of acquitted murderers for unlawful firearm possession, where testimonies were not coerced simply because defendants faced tactical choice between testifying or weakening their defense, because testimonies are not hearsay under FRE 801(d)(2)(A). United States v Lombard (1993, DC Me) 853 F Supp 543.

Bank robbery defendant was not denied opportunity to cross- examine police officer concerning failure of five eyewitnesses to identify defendant when shown photo array, since, once defendant made it clear that he would not be calling those witnesses to testify, district court correctly concluded that present sense exception to hearsay rule did not permit defendant to cross-examine officer about their failure to identify him; witnesses memories were at issue, which is why their statements of nonidentification did not come within Rule 803(1). United States v Brewer (1994, CA2 NY) 36 F3d 266.

§ 670 Prior inconsistent statements

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Under the Federal Rules, a statement inconsistent with the declarant's testimony and given under oath subject to the penalty of perjury at a deposition, trial, hearing, or other proceeding is not hearsay. 61 In states adopting the Uniform Rules of Evidence, such a statement must have been given under oath and subject to the penalty of perjury at a trial, hearing, or other proceeding, or in a deposition only if the statement is offered in a criminal proceeding. 62

A similar prior inconsistent statement exception exists in some jurisdictions under which a statement made in writing is admissible for substantive purposes where the declarant signs the statement, has personal knowledge of the facts stated, and testifies at trial on the subject at cross-examination. 63 The prior inconsistent statement is admissible as substantive evidence as well as for impeachment purposes. 64

The rule that a prior inconsistent statement may be used substantively, as well as for impeachment, applies in states which have not adopted the uniform rules, but which have similar rules regarding prior inconsistent statements. 65 Prior statements of the witness which are elicited through leading questions are admissible. 66 To satisfy the prerequisite that the statement be made under oath, it is incumbent upon the proponent of the statement to demonstrate that the individual who administered the oath had the legal authority to invoke the penalty of perjury. 67

§ 670 ----Prior inconsistent statements [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Defendant's rape conviction was supported by sufficient evidence, notwithstanding victim's recantation at trial, since victim's prior inconsistent statement identifying defendant as perpetrator was reliable, as state court found, and in light of weak and incomplete explanation and evidence of outside pressure to change her story, trial court could reasonably find that victim's recantation at trial was not credible. Ticey v Peters (1993, CA7 Ill) 8 F3d 498.

Defense witness's statement to defense attorney in meeting shortly before trial that he saw only one gun on day of incident was not admissible as prior consistent statement since prosecution implied that statement was fabricated during meeting, hence did not meet requirement that it be made before witness had motive to fabricate. United States v Patterson (1994, CA7 Ill) 23 F3d 1239, reh, en banc, den (1994, CA7 Ill) 1994 US App LEXIS 17339.

Trial court in narcotics conspiracy prosecution did not abuse its discretion in admitting testifying coconspirator's prior inconsistent statement under catch-all hearsay exception; admission did not violate confrontation clause since coconspirator was on stand and subject to cross-examination, district court properly considered corroborating evidence, and prior inconsistent statements need not be introduced only under Rule 801(d)(a)(A) since existence of catch-all hearsay exception is clear indication that Congress did not want courts to admit hearsay only if it fits within one of enumerated exceptions. United States v Valdez-Soto (1994, CA9 Cal) 31 F3d 1467, 94 CDOS 6111, 94 Daily Journal DAR 11168.

Child molestation victim's prior statements were admissible, where statements to police were reliable and extremely relevant, court believed that victim's loss of memory was feigned and, although true purpose of offer of evidence was substantive, probative value outweighed its prejudicial effect. State v Nevarez (1993, Ariz App) 875 P2d 184, 155 Ariz Adv Rep 6.

Fundamental requirement of admissibility of prior statement is that statement in fact be inconsistent; normally, testimony that witness does not remember event is not inconsistent with witness's prior statement describing event, although rule is not applied mechanically. People v Johnson (1992) 3 Cal 4th 1183, 14 Cal Rptr 2d 702, 842 P2d 1, 92 CDOS 9582, 92 Daily Journal DAR 15971, reh den People v Johnson (1993, Cal) 1993 Cal LEXIS 221 and stay gr People v Johnson (1993, Cal) 1993 Cal LEXIS 2188 and petition for certiorari filed (May 20, 1993).

In prosecution for murder and related offenses, admission into evidence of transcript of witness' testimony at probable-cause hearing, after prosecution demonstrated unavailability of witness, which included prior inconsistent statement, did not implicate right to confrontation where testimony was given under oath, subject to criminal penalties for perjury, testimony was given before judicial tribunal that kept accurate judicial record of proceedings, and defense counsel tested statements at hearing in manner that was equivalent of significant cross-examination; however, prior inconsistent statement identifying defendant as assailant should not have been admitted, since witness did not testify at trial. State v Williams (1994) 231 Conn 235, 645 A2d 999.

In hearing to determine if trial of 14- year-old accused of murder should be transferred to regular criminal docket, prior inconsistent statements of 2 witnesses were properly admitted where: (1) one statement was given 2 days after crime, and not in response to leading questions; (2) statement was signed with each page initialed after witness read them; (3) other witnesses' statements were made within 24 hours of crime; (4) witness handwrote statement; and (5) there was ample corroborative testimony. In re Bassel C. (1993) 33 Conn App 90, 633 A2d 733.

Court erred in refusing to admit evidence of prior consistent statement of alleged victim of child molestation and to instruct jury on prior consistent statements, and errors were not harmless since they affected finding of incredibility of trial testimony of victim and her corroborating witnesses. Harper v State (1994) 213 Ga App 505, 445 SE2d 548, 94 Fulton County D R 2107.

Where the State called a witness who was expected to give testimony that the defendant had "hung around" with an individual who had confessed to the crime charged and that, at about the time of the offense, she had seen the defendant with this individual and that the defendant had come to her, crying and upset, but where she denied all these propositions when questioned directly, the trial court abused its discretion in allowing the State to impeach the witness by introducing hearsay evidence of her prior inconsistent statements, since under these circumstances her testimony had been merely disappointing to the State rather than damaging. People v Cruz (1994) 162 Ill 2d 314, 205 Ill Dec 345, 643 NE2d 636.

Court properly refused to admit evidence of voided police arrest report where defendant had not elicited identity of person who made statements in report; statements could not possibly have met requirements of either business record or prior inconsistent statement exceptions to hearsay rule. People v Dananel (1992, 2d Dept) 183 AD2d 778, 584 NYS2d 485, app den 80 NY2d 902, 588 NYS2d 828, 602 NE2d 236.

Although the correct procedure would have been for the trial court to give defendant's requested limiting instruction with regard to a prior inconsistent statement at the time the request was made and in conjunction with the admission of the statement, because the trial court gave a correct limiting instruction in its charge, the error was not prejudicial. State v Williams (1995) 341 NC 1, 459 SE2d 208.

Prior inconsistent statement of witness to shooting was properly admitted as substantive evidence, after witness denied at trial he saw who fired shots, where (1) statement was given 12 days after shooting, at time when events had been fresh in witness' mind and when it had been less likely he had motive for falsification; (2) statement had been given under highly reliable circumstances, when witness had voluntarily gone with police to headquarters at time when he was not suspect, had not been restrained in any way, and had been treated well by police; and (3) statement had been reviewed by witness and changes made before he signed it. Commonwealth v Jones (1994, Pa Super) 644 A2d 177.

In murder prosecution, denial of defense counsel's attempt to question witness about prior inconsistent statement in which he had said, in reference to time he was in car, "where I was still shooting," was reversible error where witness had testified at trial that car's passengers were unarmed and surprised by attack. State v Doctor (1994, RI) 644 A2d 1287.

In murder prosecution, prior inconsistent statement of eyewitness was properly admitted as substantive evidence where police officer had reduced statement to writing as it was being made, and witness had then signed each page of written statement. Commonwealth v Ragan (1994, Pa) 645 A2d 811.

In negligence action, where defendant contended that one inconsistent sentence brought entire prior statement of witness within scope of rule irrespective of fact that rest of statement was consistent with witness' trial testimony, court of appeals held that defendant had made no showing that doctrine of completeness required admission of entire statement of witness because defendant had not demonstrated that any other portions of witness statement were relevant to portion admitted so that they ought in fairness be considered contemporaneously with it, as out-of-court statement that is inconsistent with declarant's trial testimony does not carry with it, like some evidentiary trojan horse, entire regiment of other out-of-court statements that might have been made contemporaneously (Stats §§ 901.07, 908.01(4)(a)1). Wikrent v Toys "R" Us (1993, App) 179 Wis 2d 297, 507 NW2d 130.

Where witness statement was clearly inconsistent with testimony at trial, pretrial statement was admissible as nonhearsay by virtue of rule, which permits receipt into evidence for substantive purposes out- of-court statements made by witness who testifies at trial and who is subject to cross- examination concerning statement, as long as statement is inconsistent with witness' trial testimony (Stats § 908.01(4)(a)1). Wikrent v Toys "R" Us (1993, App) 179 Wis 2d 297, 507 NW2d 130.

In prosecution of defendant for sexually related offenses, victim's original accusation, offered by state as prior inconsistent statement, was relevant and admissible to, inter alia, furnish context of charged crimes and relationship between defendant and victim. State v McMahon (1994, App) 186 Wis 2d 68, 519 NW2d 621.

§ 671 --Given at deposition, trial, hearing, or other proceeding

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

A witnesses' prior inconsistent statement is not hearsay and may be used as substantive evidence if it meets the following prerequisites: the statement must have been given under oath subject to the penalty of perjury at trial, hearing, or other proceeding, or in a deposition; the statement must be inconsistent with the witnesses' testimony at trial; and the witness must be subject to cross-examination. 68 This approach is also taken in the Federal Rules of Evidence. 69 However, under the Uniform Rules of Evidence, the statement is only required to be given under oath and subject to the penalty of perjury at trial, hearing, or other proceedings, or in a deposition if it is offered in a criminal proceeding. 70

Other states omit the oath requirement. 71 It has been held that a proceeding contemplated by the rule is a formal action before a judicial tribunal, as well as an action before a quasi-judicial officer or board, invoked to enforce or protect a right. 72 This requirement contemplates situations in which an official verbatim record is routinely kept, whether stenographically or by electronic means, and under legal authority so as to insure its reliability. 73 In particular, the requirement is satisfied by testimony given at a prior trial; 74 in a deposition; 75 at a preliminary hearing; 76 in a grand jury proceeding; 77 and at certain nonjudicial proceedings, such as an immigration interrogation. 78

When the circumstances surrounding the proceeding or recording of the statement militate against reliability and truthfulness, those proceedings will not come within the scope of the phrase "other proceeding." 79 Statements given under informal circumstances which may not be regarded as within the scope of the phrase "other proceeding," include the conversation of a declarant during an investigative interview conducted by Internal Revenue agents, 80 or postal agents; 81 and stationhouse or street-side declarations made to law enforcement agents, even if in the form of a sworn affidavit. 82

It has been held that affidavits given during a police station interrogation should be analyzed on a case by case basis to determine their admissibility; thus, for example, where minimal guarantees of truthfulness were met because the statement was attested to before a notary, under oath and subject to penalty for perjury, and where the witness wrote the statement in her own words then the court may find the statement sufficiently reliable to be used as a prior inconsistent statement. State v Smith, 97 Wash 2d 856, 651 P2d 207.

§ 672 --Finding of inconsistency

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

To impeach a witness with a prior inconsistent statement, counsel must ask him specifically about the statement at issue, with reference to the time and place at which he allegedly made it and the person to whom it was made, and give him an opportunity to admit or deny having made it. 83 The two statements must be sufficiently inconsistent to render the prior statement admissible. 84 After the declarant has testified, 85 the court may exercise its broad discretion in deciding the exact point at which a prior statement is sufficiently inconsistent with trial testimony to permit its use in evidence. 86 No explicit guidance for determining when statements are inconsistent for the purpose of admitting a prior inconsistent statement is necessary. 87 A court may determine an inconsistency has occurred as a result of the declarant's evasive answers, silence, or a change of position. 88

The required finding of inconsistency has been satisfied—

—when the prior statement directly contradicts the declarant's trial testimony. 89

—when at trial, the declarant is unable to recall or claims a faulty memory concerning the events related in the prior statement, 90 at least where the claimed inability to recall is disbelieved by the trial judge and the witness does not deny that the prior statement was in fact made. 91

—whenever the thrust of the prior statement differs significantly from the thrust of the declarant's trial testimony. 92

Evidence that a prior statement is inaccurate may not be sufficient to allow the prior statement to be admitted at trial. 93

§ 673 --Timing of submission of statement

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

It is a preferred, but not mandated, practice to offer prior inconsistent statements while the declarant is still on the witness stand. 94 Further, the inconsistent statement can be introduced prior to giving declarant an opportunity or chance to explain. 95 Introduction of a prior inconsistent statement after the witness has been discharged is permissible where the opposing counsel has a full opportunity to cross-examine the witness regarding the prior statement. 96

Some courts have permitted the calling party to put into evidence a prior inconsistent statement of its witness. 97 Because the prior statement may be used as substantive evidence, the calling party may escape the objection that it is calling a witness solely for the purpose of introducing otherwise inadmissible evidence under the guise of impeachment. 98 However, it has also been held that hearsay rules should not be permitted to be circumvented by allowing a party to elicit a statement from its own witness that the witness had given an inconsistent statement before; it remains the duty of the opposing counsel to test the statement to determine whether there is indeed a relevant inconsistency and it is the obligation of the trial judge to make the appropriate ruling on the basis of his perception of the statement after an objection is made. 99

Establishing prior inconsistent statements by using an official transcript or recording, which may be submitted to the jury in the form of an exhibit, has been stated to be a preferred means of putting the statement into evidence. 1 When a witness admits to having made the prior inconsistent statement, it is proper to exclude a tape recording of the statement. 2 Further, the trial court may properly refuse to allow counsel to reread prior inconsistent statements of government witnesses during counsel's closing argument to the jury. 3

Case authorities:

The trial court did not err in allowing the State to introduce extrinsic evidence of a witness's prior inconsistent statement where the witness testified on direct examination that she had made the prior inconsistent statement, since the extrinsic evidence of this statement was thus admissible to corroborate this portion of the witness's testimony. § 675 Prior consistent statements

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Generally, prior consistent statements of a witness are inadmissible hearsay. 4 However, a prior statement which is consistent with the declarant's current testimony and is offered to rebut an express or implied charge against the declarant of recent fabrication or improper influence or motive is not hearsay, provided the declarant testifies at the trial or hearing and is subject to cross-examination concerning the statement. 5 The fabrication is the alleged fabrication underlying the witness' trial testimony and not any fabrication resulting in a prior inconsistent out-of-court statement. 6

A prior consistent statement need not have been given in a prior proceeding. 7 Any such statements which were given before a grand jury or other proceeding are admissible. 8

The prior consistent statements need not be elicited from the impeached witness; the statements may be introduced through the testimony of third parties with knowledge, 9 or by the use of documents. 10

Although it is generally not proper to introduce a prior consistent statement in anticipation of impeachment yet to come, 11 the subsequent occurrence of impeachment may cure any error in the earlier receipt of the statement. 12 A prior consistent statement is also admissible in some states where the witness is impeached by a charge of bias, interest, or corruption as long as the statement was made prior to the existence of the circumstances relied on to discredit the credibility of the witnesses' testimony. 13 It has also been held that where a witness whose veracity is at issue is present at trial, under oath, and subject to cross-examination, then a prior consistent out-of-court statement of that witness is admissible; any motive that the witness may have had to fabricate his story affects the weight and not the admissibility of the evidence. 14

Case authorities:

Rape victim's prior consistent statement was properly admitted where victim's credibility on issues of consent and prior statements had been attacked by defense counsel on cross-examination. Satterwhite v State (1994) 212 Ga App 543, 442 SE2d 5, 94 Fulton County D R 855, reconsideration dismd (Mar 23, 1994).

Where a witness testified at trial that defendant had stated that he was going to kill the victim, and defense counsel impeached the witness by questioning a detective about only a portion of a sentence in the witness's out-of-court statement to the effect that defendant never threatened the victim in her presence, the State was properly allowed to rebut the inference that the witness had made inconsistent statements by having the detective read the entire sentence stating that the victim had told the witness that defendant had threatened him but defendant had never threatened him in her presence, even if such testimony was hearsay. State v Ratliff (1995) 341 NC 610, 461 SE2d 325.

The court properly permitted the use of prior consistent statements of a prosecution witness to rehabilitate the witness after she was cross examined at great length as to her ability to perceive and recall events due to her high alcohol consumption; the cross examination focused on her credibility in the sense that alcohol severely limited her ability to observe and remember the events at issue and, therefore, the prior consistent statements were properly admitted. Commonwealth v Paoello (1995, Pa) 665 A2d 439.

Prior statement of child complainant in sexual abuse case was inadmissible as prior consistent statement, where complainant's testimony related to incident charged, while prior statement related to different incident that occurred 1 year earlier. Kipp v State (1994, Tex Crim) 876 SW2d 330.

§ 676 --Rebutting charge of recent fabrication or improper influence or motive

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

A prior consistent statement is not admissible as a nonhearsay statement unless the opposing party has attacked the witness' in-court testimony as a recent fabrication or as resulting from improper influence or motive. 15

The trial judge has wide discretion in determining whether the impeachment techniques used warrant the admission of a prior consistent statement. 16 Two kinds of impeaching evidence may be said to raise the charge of "recent fabrication or improper influence or motive." One is direct evidence of bias or motive, 17 and the other is prior inconsistent statements by the witness. 18 However, a prior inconsistent statement will not automatically raise a charge of recent fabrication or improper influence, 19 and mere challenges to a witness's credibility are insufficient to support the admission of a prior consistent statement unless the challenge is designed to also invoke a charge of recent fabrication or improper influence. 20 Moreover, a contradiction in testimony does not necessarily give rise to an implied charge of fabrication, 21 or improper motive. 22

Prior consistent statements are admissible even where cross-examination fails to yield a specific inconsistent statement. 23 The prior consistent statement may be used as substantive evidence, whether the impeaching attack involves direct evidence of fabrication, influence, or motive; 24 or indirect evidence in the form of prior inconsistent statements. 25

An implied charge of fabrication may arise through the cross-examination of more than one witness. 26

§ 676 --Rebutting charge of recent fabrication or improper influence or motive [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Testimony of six witnesses concerning child sexual abuse victim's out-of-court statements to them was admissible as not hearsay to rebut defense implication, arising from cross-examination of victim, that she had fabricated allegations in order to live with her mother. United States v Tome (1993, CA10 NM) 3 F3d 342, petition for certiorari filed (Nov 24, 1993).

In prosecution for various sexual offenses involving two minor step-daughters, testimony of psychiatric social worker was properly admitted regarding details of complaints related to her by victims where defense counsel asked both victims several questions implying that they had fabricated allegations against defendant. Register v State (1993, Ala App) 640 So 2d 3, affd (Ala) 640 So 2d 12.

In prosecution for rape of child by force and aggravated rape, trial court did not err in allowing victim to read, on redirect examination, entire five-page handwritten statement she had made for police shortly after incident, where defense counsel had, in cross-examination, obtained victim's admission that her written statement did not mention fact she had testified to on direct examination, that defendant had held knife to her throat during rapes. Prosecutor properly attempted to rehabilitate her on redirect by asking her to read passage from her statement that mentioned that defendant "had the knife and said 'I'd rather kill you than be on the run.'" Prosecutor was entitled to show jury that her statement had indeed contained reference to knife in context of defendant's assaults on her, to rebut suggestion that her testimony about knife was recent contrivance intended to strengthen Commonwealth's case against defendant. Commonwealth v Graves (1993) 35 Mass App 76, 616 NE2d 817, summary op at (Mass App) 21 M.L.W. 3223 and review den 416 Mass 1103, 22 M.L.W. 9 (statement was also admissible under "doctrine of completeness" and as fresh complaint).

In negligence action, where defendant argued that portions of out-of-court witness statement made to insurance adjuster should have been received under rule which rendered nonhearsay out-of-court declaration that was consistent with declarant's testimony and was offered to rebut express or implied charge against declarant of recent fabrication or improper influence or motive, court of appeals concluded that remainder of witness' statements to adjuster were properly excluded from evidence by trial court, as trial court found there was no evidence in record that would allow court to infer that there was any recent fabrication by witness, nor that there was any improperly influence exerted over witness by any person, nor was there any evidence of motive produced that would induce witness to testify other than truthfully, and court of appeals noted that those facts were uncontradicted and were not, therefore, clearly erroneous (Stats §§ 805.17(2), 908.01(4)(a)2). Wikrent v Toys "R" Us (1993, App) 179 Wis 2d 297, 507 NW2d 130.

In action by former employee against his former employer to recover for constructive termination involving, inter alia, alleged age discrimination, trial court did not err in admitting, as prior consistent statement, plaintiff's diary, which was prepared when plaintiff was told that his next four months' salary should be considered severance pay, and he consulted attorney and was advised to start diary, where defendant's counsel charged that plaintiff's version of events was "fantasy and fabrication" and, during cross-examination of plaintiff and his wife, repeatedly challenged authenticity of their testimony as well as their preparation and alleged difference in three editions of plaintiff's diary, clearly implying recent editing and insinuating diary was recently fabricated or altered. To counter implication made by defendant's counsel, it was proper for plaintiff's counsel to permit him to refresh his recollection from diary itself (as well as to question him about prior deposition testimony given by plaintiff in same regard), and oral testimony having included practically entire diary, document itself was properly admitted. Hunio v Tishman Construction Corp. (1993, 2nd Dist) 14 Cal App 4th 1010, 18 Cal Rptr 2d 253, 93 CDOS 2449, 93 Daily Journal DAR 4065, review gr (Cal) 20 Cal Rptr 2d 787, 854 P2d 79, 93 CDOS 4784, 93 Daily Journal DAR 8004.

Handwritten report by a Coast Guard officer detailing the arrest and pursuit of drug smuggling suspects was held inadmissible as a prior consistent statement, because cross-examination of the officer by defense counsel did not create an express or implied charge of fabrication, where counsel did not challenge the discovery of marijuana seeds on the defendant's boat, but instead challenged the officer on whether the seeds could have belonged to the boat's previous owner, and on whether the bales of marijuana discovered floating on the water belonged to the defendant where the seeds were destroyed before tests could be made as to the possible relationship of the seeds to the marijuana bales. United States v Pendas-Martinez (CA11 Fla) 845 F2d 938, 25 Fed Rules Evid Serv 1142.

§ 677 --Whether prior statement must antedate motive to fabricate

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Some courts have ruled that prior consistent statements need not antedate a motive to fabricate in order to be admissible, ²⁷ but others hold that a prior consistent statement is not relevant to rebut an allegation of recent fabrication when made after a motive to fabricate arises because repetition of a statement while under the same motivation does not imply veracity. ²⁸ In certain jurisdictions, courts have indicated that prior consistent statements made after a motive to fabricate arises are inadmissible, ²⁹ at least in those circumstances where the prior statement is being offered as substantive evidence. ³⁰ Of the courts which require the offering party to demonstrate that the prior consistent statement antedates a motive to fabricate, some distinguish between the substantive use of a prior statement and its use for rehabilitative purposes and will allow the prior consistent statement to be introduced even if made after a motive to fabricate arises when the prior statement is used solely for the purposes of rehabilitating the witness. ³¹

Some courts have indicated that prior consistent statements must antedate a motive to fabricate before the statement is admitted for rehabilitative purposes. ³² In the Second Circuit, when there is a generalized attack on the credibility of a witness, a prior consistent statement offered solely for purposes of rehabilitation is admissible if the prior statement was made before the witness had a motive to fabricate. ³³ Prior consistent statements may be admissible for purposes of rehabilitation, subject to the discretion of the trial judge, even if the statements were made after a motive to fabricate arises—

—when the prior statement has a probative force beyond merely showing repetition of the statement, as when the prior statement is introduced to demonstrate whether a prior inconsistent statement was made, whether the impeaching statement is truly inconsistent with the witness' trial testimony.

—when the proper statement will amplify or clarify the alleged inconsistent statement. 34

In jurisdictions where it is required that the consistent statement predate the motive to falsify, rehabilitation with consistent statements may be impossible if the motive is alleged to exist from the outset. 35 Statements made when the declarant does not anticipate or fear prosecution are considered to have been made before a motive to fabricate arises. 36 Although postarrest statements made to law enforcement officers during plea negotiations in hopes of bettering the declarant's position may be inadmissible because the statement was made after the motive to fabricate arose, 37 statements made to law enforcement officers prior to the declarant entering into any cooperation agreement with the Government have been found admissible where there is no indication that the declarant expected leniency in exchange for the statement. 38 A motive to fabricate does not necessarily arise upon the arrest of the declarant. 39 Further, statements made during plea negotiations for a prior trial may be admissible in a subsequent trial on the ground that the declarant's motive to fabricate has expired. 40

Case authorities:

When witness' testimony has been attacked on cross-examination, directly or by inference, as recent fabrication, witness may be permitted to show that he or she made similar statements at some earlier time when free from alleged bias; such prior consistent statements antedating motive to fabricate are not introduced to prove or disprove facts in issue, but to rehabilitate credibility of witness. People v Seit (1995) 86 NY2d 92, 629 NYS2d 998, 653 NE2d 1168.

§ 678 Statements of identification

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

The declarant's statement of identification of a person made after perceiving the person is not hearsay where the declarant testifies at the trial or hearing and is subject to cross-examination concerning the statement. 41 There is no requirement that the identifying witness perceive the person again after the event took place. 42 The rule is not limited to statements of identification made soon after the criminal incident, but applies also to statements of identification made soon after perceiving the suspect or his likeness in the identification process. 43 The requirement that the identification be made shortly after perception is consistent with the requirement under the Uniform Rules of Evidence. 44

One witness may testify regarding an identification made by another witness if the declarant also testifies and is available for cross-examination. 45

The rule excluding statements of identification from the definition of hearsay applies to prior statements of identification made in a wide range of circumstances, including statements made after the declarant's examination of a display of photographs, 46 of a sketch of the accused, 47 or to verbal identifications. 48 The identifier need not even have witnessed the event in question. 49

Unlike the exclusions for prior inconsistent or consistent statements, the operation of the exclusion for pretrial statements of identification is not related to the impeachment process. If the identifier's trial testimony is consistent with the pretrial statement, it does not matter whether the statement qualifies as a prior consistent statement, 50 nor does it matter whether the pretrial statement qualifies as a prior inconsistent statement if the identifier's testimony differs from his pretrial identification. 51

Pretrial statements of identification are admissible where the identifier during the trial picks a person other than the accused as the culprit, 52 or where he testifies during the trial that he cannot say whether the accused is the culprit or not. 53

Testimony by the identifying witness concerning the pretrial identification may be corroborated by third persons present at the identification and to whom the identifier was speaking, 54 and the corroborative testimony may be received as substantive evidence. 55

In addition, it has been held that it is within the scope of a trial court's discretion to admit hearsay statements of identification of items in a manner analogous to admission of statements identifying people. 56

4. Hearsay Exceptions, Generally [679-703]

a. Availability of Declarant Immaterial [679-689]

(1). In General [679-682]

§ 679 Background

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Under appropriate circumstances a hearsay statement may possess circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness sufficient to justify nonproduction of the declarant in person at the trial even though the declarant may be available. 57 The Federal and Uniform Rules of Evidence collect under one rule the exceptions for which the availability of the declarant is immaterial and provide that hearsay material meeting the stated requirements is not excluded by the hearsay rule even if the declarant is available as a witness. 58

Exceptions formerly lumped together under the res gestae doctrine, 59 which has not been adopted as such in the Federal Rules of Evidence, 60 but to which resort is still occasionally made, are treated under this rule. 61

Although there is no availability requirement under this rule, 62 borderline issues of admissibility may be swayed in favor of admissibility where the declarant is available, on the principle that prejudice from improperly admitted hearsay testimony is reduced when the out-of-court declarant is called as a witness, particularly where not only the declarant but the hearer of the statement and the opponent of the statement can testify. 63

◆ Practice guide: Under certain circumstances a defendant may object, on the ground of probable unreliability, to admission of a declaration of a nonwitness which is within an exception to the hearsay rule, because of the defendant's special rights under the confrontation clause of the Sixth Amendment. 64

§ 679 ----Background [SUPPLEMENT]

Practice Aids: Constitutional law – sixth amendment – the confrontation clause is not violated by the admission of evidence embraced by any firmly rooted hearsay exception regardless of an out of court declarant's availability at trial. White v. Illinois [116 L Ed 2d 848 (1992)], 70 U Det Mercy LR 989 (1993).

§ 680 Reputation concerning personal or family history

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

An exception to the hearsay rules permits admission of evidence of reputation among members of a person's family by blood, adoption, or marriage, or among his associates, or in the community, concerning a person's birth, adoption, marriage, divorce, death, legitimacy, relationship by blood, adoption, or marriage, ancestry, or other similar fact of his personal or family history. 65 Reputation has been defined as the status resulting from the notoriety produced by cumulation of facts tending to prove the quality that a person enjoys in a family and in society; to ensure trustworthiness, that reputation must have arisen prior to the controversy. 66 Evidence of reputation is competent to prove a death, 67 status as an heir, 68 and an acknowledgment of paternity. 69 Evidence that the parties to an alleged marriage lived together, and acquired a general reputation as husband and wife, is always admissible for the purpose of proving the fact of marriage. 70

The Federal Rules and states adopting the Uniform Rules also recognize a similar exception for statements of personal or family history which are admissible when the declarant is unavailable. 71

§ 681 Reputation concerning boundaries or general history

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Evidence of reputation in a community, arising before the controversy, as to boundaries of or customs affecting lands in the community, and reputation as to events of general history important to the community, state, or nation are admissible as an exception to the hearsay rule. 72 Generally, the reputation testimony must report a general consensus of opinion and not just an assertion of an individual's personal observation. 73 The reputation must arise before the controversy only with respect to boundaries of or customs affecting lands, 74 whereas the historical character of reputation concerning general history dispenses with the need that the reputation antedate the controversy. 75

The facts for which the opinion or reputation can be taken as trustworthy must be facts which have been of interest to all members of the community. 76 The constant exposure of facts to discussion by the community sifts out the possible errors and gives the residual facts generally accepted by the locality a trustworthiness which allows them to be presented as evidence in a court of law. 77

It is important that reputation be admissible to establish ancient boundaries, since landmarks are frequently found to have been made of perishable materials which pass away with the generation in which they are made. 78 The recorded plat of the original plan of a city is admissible as the highest species of evidence of reputation as to the location and boundaries of the lots and streets in it. 79

§ 682 Reputation as to character

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Evidence of reputation of a person's character among his associates or in the community is admissible as an exception to the hearsay rule. 80 It has been said that in a complex urban society, a person's reputation among coworkers might be more significant than his reputation among his neighbors. 81 Testimony regarding a person's character can only relate what the witness has heard others say about the person's reputation and cannot relate specific instances of the person's conduct or the witness' personal opinion as to the person's character. 82 There is no requirement that the information come directly from those with personal knowledge or there be a showing that the community has, in fact, reached a general conclusion regarding the individual's reputation. 83 Character witnesses may testify as to a defendant's reputation in the community, as affected by particular allegations shown to have been the subject of public discussion in the community. 84 However, it has been held that the reputation opinion must be at least partially based on a discussion of matters other than the actions or offenses for which the defendant is being tried. 85

(2). Residual Exception [683-689]

§ 683 Admission of other statements having equivalent circumstantial guaranties of trustworthiness

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Hearsay statements which do not fall within the scope of the established exceptions to the hearsay rule may still be admissible where they have circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness equivalent to those of the established exceptions. 86 Basically, the same standards and evidentiary principles apply to this and the residual exception applicable to exceptions requiring the declarant to be unavailable. 87 Admission of the hearsay evidence must comply with the spirit, if not the letter, of the established exceptions. 88 Congress did not intend to create a broad new hearsay exception, and thus it is said that the residual exceptions may be used only in exceptional circumstances. 89 The purpose of the residual exception to the hearsay rule is to allow trustworthy hearsay evidence to be admitted, but this should happen only when it is both worthy of trust and necessary to effectuate justice. 90

In order for hearsay not covered by an established exception to be admitted, the court must determine that (1) the statement is offered as evidence of a material fact; (2) the statement is more probative on the point for which it is offered than any other evidence which the proponent can procure through reasonable efforts; and (3) the general purposes of the rules of evidence and the interests of justice will best be served by admission of the statement into evidence. 91 The residual exception has been cited in support of the admission of hearsay evidence such as—

—business records not admissible under the business records exception. 92

—government reports and publications not admissible as public records under the public records exception, in cases in which the government is a party 93 and in cases between private litigants. 94

—prior inconsistent statements not excepted from the definition of hearsay. 95

—prior grand jury testimony, if there are equivalent circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness. 96

—a postmark to prove that a letter was mailed from a particular place. 97

—affidavits of purchasers of a product, in an FTC case. 98

—films. 99

—polls and surveys. 1

—other extrajudicial statements. 2

The residual exception does not, however, warrant the admission in evidence of untrustworthy hearsay, such as——certain business records. 3

—prior testimony, whether before a grand jury 4 or at a former trial. 5

◆ Caution: While it has been held that the residual exception cannot provide a basis for admitting testimony specifically addressed in another exception, 6 elsewhere the view has been taken that the hearsay exceptions are not mutually exclusive, thus a hearsay statement that is not admissible, for example, as a statement of a coconspirator, may still be admissible under the residual exception. 7 Under the latter view, the "Near Miss" theory, whereby hearsay evidence cannot be admitted under a catchall exception if it has been offered and rejected under the specific exception that most nearly describes it, has been rejected on the ground that appropriate limitations on residual exceptions should be found in the rules themselves and in their legislative history. 8

§ 683 ----Admission of other statements having equivalent circumstantial guaranties of trustworthiness [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Written ratification falls under FRE 803(24) catchall hearsay exception and is admissible, where it is most important evidence to show timing of key assignments of interests in patent licensing agreement, because president of companies involved also submits explanatory affidavit, and there is no evidence that makes court doubt president's veracity in signing ratification. Refac Fin. Corp. v Patlex Corp. (1996, ED Pa) 912 F Supp 159.

Letter from trustee for bankrupt partnership to attorney for partnership, in which trustee acknowledged waiving attorney-client privilege on behalf of partnership, was properly admitted under residual hearsay exception. United States v Campbell (1996, CA5 Tex) 73 F3d 44, CCH Bankr L Rptr ¶ 76779.

On remand, three-year-old victim's statements to others that her mother burned her legs with cigarettes should be reassessed for admissibility under residual hearsay exception, considering evidence of prior interrogation, prompting, or manipulation by adults. United States v Barrett (1993, CA8 Minn) 8 F3d 1296, 38 Fed Rules Evid Serv 398.

Videotaped recording of codefendant's testimony at prior state trial was properly admitted in federal trial under former testimony exception to hearsay rule where defendants had full and fair opportunity to cross-examine codefendant at state trial and there was no suggestion that either factual nature of case against defendants or defendants' motives for cross-examining codefendant had changed from first to second trial; all that changed was technology that defendants might have used to enhance videotape of underlying incident as basis for questions in cross-examination, but that did not undercut fact that defendants had opportunity to cross-examine codefendant. United States v Koon (1994, CA9 Cal) 34 F3d 1416, 94 CDOS 6346, 94 Daily Journal DAR 11624, 40 Fed Rules Evid Serv 1.

Pilot's statement in near mid-air collision report filed with FAA that "that was pretty close fella" was admissible as hearsay exception under 803(1) and (2) and statement referring to what had just happened as "near miss" was admissible under 803(2). Bennett v National Transp. Safety Bd. (1995, CA10) 55 F3d 495.

Statements in police report by witness to automobile accident were not admissible, although police reports generally were admissible as business records, since statements were hearsay, were not within any hearsay exception, and were not made by witness in course of business. O'Shea v Mignone (1994) 35 Conn App 828, 647 A2d 37, app den 231 Conn 938.

In prosecution for first degree criminal sexual conduct committed against nine-year-old boy, admission of victim's out-of-court statements to police officer and victim's therapist did not deny defendant his Sixth Amendment right to confrontation where victim had been determined to be unavailable and where statements were supported by "particularized guarantees of trustworthiness." Police officer's videotaped interview with victim contained guarantees of trustworthiness, namely, non-leading nature of most questions, use of age-appropriate language by victim, and his good memory of details. Guarantees in statement to therapist were even stronger since she did not anticipate hearing of abuse, but was treating victim because of complaints of his disruptive behavior at school, and victim initiated discussion of sexual abuse spontaneously and therapist asked few, if any, leading questions. State v Lonergan (1993, Minn App) 505 NW2d 349, review den (Minn) 1993 Minn LEXIS 711.

In prosecution for murder and other crimes, trial court did not err in admitting, under "catch-all" exception to hearsay rule, statement by witness regarding victim's feeling about anal intercourse where statement was offered as evidence of material fact, statement was more probative on point of whether victim consented to anal sex than any other evidence, and general interests of justice would best be served by admission of statement, circumstances surrounding it having indicated trustworthiness equivalent to evidence admitted under established hearsay exceptions. State v Williams (1994, NM) 874 P2d 12.

Statements made by defendant to a medical expert who stated an opinion that at the time of a killing defendant was so intoxicated that he was incapable of premeditation and deliberation were not admissible as substantive evidence under the medical diagnosis and treatment exception to the hearsay rule set forth in G.S. § 8C-1, Rule 803(4) where the statements were made by defendant ten months after the killing for the purpose of preparing and presenting a defense to the crimes for which he stood accused rather than for the purpose of seeking treatment of a medical condition or a diagnosis of his condition to obtain treatment. State v Jones (1994) 339 NC 114, 451 SE2d 826, reconsideration den (NC) 453 SE2d 188.

Statements made by defendant's mother and wife to defendant's medical expert were not admissible as substantive evidence under the medical diagnosis and treatment exception to the hearsay rule set forth in Rule 803(4) because only the statements of the person being diagnosed or treated are excepted from the prohibition against hearsay. State v Jones (1994) 339 NC 114, 451 SE2d 826, reconsideration den (NC) 453 SE2d 188.

Defendant's statement to his girlfriend, when she told him she had heard he had shot someone, that he had shot a gun but had not shot anyone was not admissible under the residual exception to the hearsay rule found in GS § 8C-1, Rule 803(24) since the statement did not possess equivalent guarantees of trustworthiness in that it was a self-serving declaration, was not part of the res gestae, and was not available for corroborative purposes because defendant did not testify. State v Jackson (1995) 340 NC 301, 457 SE2d 862.

§ 684 Burden of proof; discretion of court

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

In seeking to have hearsay evidence admitted under the residual exception, the proponent of the evidence has the burden of establishing the fundamental requirements for admission by a preponderance of the evidence. 9 Judicial discretion to admit otherwise inadmissible hearsay is not unfettered under the residual exception. 10 In jury trials, a preliminary hearing as to admissibility, at which the foundation facts for the residual exception must be established, should be held outside the presence of the jury. 11 When a court relies on the residual exception, on its own initiative or at the urging of counsel, for admission of hearsay evidence not coming within other exceptions, the court should state on its record the basis for its determination of trustworthiness, probative value, and necessity. 12

§ 684 ----Burden of proof; discretion of court [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

The trial court in a first-degree murder trial erred by admitting into evidence under the residual hearsay exception of N.C.G.S. § 8C-1, Rule 804(b)(5) a jail inmate's letter to a detective concerning statements allegedly made by defendant about the murder where (1) the trial court failed to make any particularized findings of fact or conclusions of law regarding whether the letter possessed "equivalent guarantees of trustworthiness"; (2) the inmate had no personal knowledge of the events to which he referred in the letter; (3) the inmate was not motivated to speak the truth but rather to say what the police wanted to hear in order to make a deal; (4) while the inmate never recanted his statement, he refused to acknowledge at trial that he wrote the letter, that the letter was in his handwriting, or that he wrote the address on the envelope; (5) the inmate was unavailable because he refused to testify; (6) the letter contained many inaccuracies; (7) the inmate had the opportunity to obtain specific facts about the murder without actually talking with defendant because he was in the courtroom during defendant's probable cause hearing; and (8) the trial court improperly considered corroborating evidence to support the letter's trustworthiness. Since the author of the letter was not subject to full and effective cross-examination by defendant, defendant's rights under the Confrontation Clause were violated by its admission, and the State failed to show that this error was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt where the letter contained the only evidence of defendant's motive to kill the victim; the letter provided the greatest evidence of premeditation and deliberation; and the letter contained the most specific admission of defendant's guilt. State v Swindler (1994) 339 NC 469, 450 SE2d 907.

§ 685 Showing of trustworthiness

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Hearsay evidence which is similar to an enumerated hearsay exception can be admitted under the residual exception under the hearsay rules 13 where the court finds that the time, content, and circumstances of this statement provides sufficient indicia of reliability before statements are admitted under the residual exception. 14 A higher level of reliability must be established where the declarant is available than if the declarant is unavailable. 15 The trustworthiness requirement of the rule relates to the hearsay statement that is being testified to, not to the witness's testimony. 16 Factors to be considered in determining how reliable the evidence is include:

- (1) the declarant's incentive to speak truthfully or falsely; 17
- (2) factors bearing on the reliability of the reporting of the hearsay by the witness; 18
- (3) whether more than one person heard the statement; 19
- (4) whether the statements were made spontaneously; 20
- (5) timing of the declaration; 21 and
- (6) the relationship between the declarant and the witnesses. 22 Hearsay evidence used to convict a defendant must possess indicia of reliability by virtue of its inherent trustworthiness, not by reference to other evidence at trial. 23

In specific instances, circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness were found where——statements were received and assessed by defendant manufacturer's employees as valuable input and were produced directly from manufacturer's corporate files. 24

—a public document, which was filed under oath, notarized by the defendant, and prepared and filed, as required by law, by the defendant's own reelection committee, was offered against the defendant, an elected public official, in a prosecution for failure to report a campaign contribution. 25

A statement may be found inadmissible under the residual exception where it is highly self-serving in character, 26 or where the circumstances raise questions as to the accuracy of the declarant's recollection. 27

Such guarantees of trustworthiness were not present where——only parties present during taking of decedent's plaintiff's statement had interests adverse to defendant and where the unsworn statement was highly self-serving in character. 28

—a mother's testimony that her doctor stated to her in 1952 that he was giving her DES was self-serving and lacked corroboration. 29

—letters were summaries of payroll records supplied by personnel of a company and compiled for litigation purposes in response to administrative subpoenas issued by the Department of Labor, and the company was a party to an action against a city seeking unpaid wages. 30

—an analysis of the record of the trial court disclosed that at the time the court ruled on the admissibility on certain evidence under this exception, it knew that the declarant had made two different statements to another. 31

—in identifying the perpetrator of a sexual abuse crime against a child, the child identified five different perpetrators which made the identification of the perpetrator ambiguous. 32

§ 685 ----Showing of trustworthiness [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Hearsay exception for statement authorized by party does not contemplate that statement be shown to have been made by employee at instance of employer, only that declarant's statement concern matters within scope of her agency or employment. Woodman v Haemonetics Corp. (1995, CA1 Mass) 51 F3d 1087, 67 BNA FEP Cas 838, 66 CCH EPD ¶ 43520.

Written ratification falls under FRE 803(24) catchall hearsay exception and is admissible, where it is most important evidence to show timing of key assignments of interests in patent licensing agreement, because president of companies involved also submits explanatory affidavit, and there is no evidence that makes court doubt president's veracity in signing ratification. Refac Fin. Corp. v Patlex Corp. (1996, ED Pa) 912 F Supp 159.

Statements made by murder for hire victim after initial shooting, in which he named number of persons other than defendants as his likely assailants, were properly rejected since they bore no indicia of reliability because victim changed his story on more than one occasion. United States v Winters (1994, CA6 Mich) 33 F3d 720, 1994 FED App 314P.

Shipping documents concerning stolen container of gloves were properly admitted under residual hearsay exception; documents had particularized guarantees of trustworthiness in that customs brokers and U.S. Customs regularly rely on accuracy of such documents, bill of lading was by shipper in exporting country and had to be accurate to load goods on ocean vessel, and customs broker testified that he had processed similar documents for same exporting company before and they had never been inaccurate. United States v Bachsian (1993, CA9 Cal) 4 F3d 796, 93 CDOS 6755, 93 Daily Journal DAR 11548, cert den (US) 1994 US LEXIS 1123.

Declarant's statement that defendant did not commit bank robbery and that he would take responsibility for it if government needed fall guy was properly excluded as lacking sufficient indicia of trustworthiness since declarant provided no details about robbery, his bald assertion that defendant was not involved was otherwise unsubstantiated, in short, declarant offered no specific information inculcating himself and exculpating defendant. United States v Spring (1996, CA10 Utah) 80 F3d 1450.

In action seeking damages for injuries bicyclist sustained when defendant's car allegedly struck him on his bicycle, trial court erred in admitting in evidence unredacted version of medical record that contained statement: "Patient was not wearing a helmet and accidentally ran into a stationary car," where there was no evidence linking statement to bicyclist and other declarants beside bicyclist—particularly witnesses at scene or even defendant—could have provided description of accident to ambulance personnel who then may have conveyed what they heard to hospital staff, who recorded it in bicyclist's medical records. Barrera v Wilson (1995, Dist Col App) 668 A2d 871.

Statements made by defendant to a medical expert who stated an opinion that at the time of a killing defendant was so intoxicated that he was incapable of premeditation and deliberation were not admissible as substantive evidence under the medical diagnosis and treatment exception to the hearsay rule set forth in G.S. § 8C-1, Rule 803(4) where the statements were made by defendant ten months after the killing for the purpose of preparing and presenting a defense to the crimes for which he stood accused rather than for the purpose of seeking treatment of a medical condition or a diagnosis of his condition to obtain treatment. State v Jones (1994) 339 NC 114, 451 SE2d 826, reconsideration den (NC) 453 SE2d 188.

Statements made by defendant's mother and wife to defendant's medical expert were not admissible as substantive evidence under the medical diagnosis and treatment exception to the hearsay rule set forth in Rule 803(4) because only the statements of the person being diagnosed or treated are excepted from the prohibition against hearsay. State v Jones (1994) 339 NC 114, 451 SE2d 826, reconsideration den (NC) 453 SE2d 188.

Testimony of wife of deceased and insurance agent offered to prove probable intent of deceased with regard to primary beneficiary of life insurance policy was proper under residual hearsay exception where wife and agent were only two people present at time decedent designated beneficiaries of policy, agent gained nothing from admitting that he filled out application and neglected to write wife's name in space for primary beneficiary, and all other claimants to proceeds, two children of deceased by prior marriage and two children of wife by prior marriage, were named as contingent beneficiaries. United Investors Life Ins. Co. v Alexander (1995, La App 2d Cir) 662 So 2d 831.

In an action seeking a declaration as to the date on which a licensing agreement would expire, brought by the licensor of television rights to certain films, a District Court did not err in admitting a registration statement, because the standard of due diligence applied by securities lawyers with regard to registration statements was sufficient to guarantee the requisite circumstantial trustworthiness. Hal Roach Studios, Inc. v Richard Feiner & Co. (CA9 Cal) 896 F2d 1542.

§ 686 Advance notice to adverse party

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

The proponent of a statement under the residual exception must notify the adverse parties sufficiently in advance of the trial or hearing of his intention to offer the statement in order to provide the adverse party with a fair opportunity to prepare. 33 It has been held that the advance notice requirement must be strictly enforced. 34 The requirement is not satisfied by motions made under other provisions of the evidence rules, 35 nor will the exception be available on appeal to justify the admission of certain hearsay erroneously admitted under another exception. 36 Pretrial notice should be given if at all possible; only in those situations where requiring pretrial notice is wholly impracticable should flexibility be accorded. 37 On the other hand, it has been held that the requirement is not inflexible and that some latitude must be permitted in situations where the need for the hearsay evidence does not become apparent until after the trial has commenced, as long as the adverse party is granted sufficient opportunity to challenge the trustworthiness of the hearsay statement. 38

The notice requirement is satisfied where the opposing party brings a pretrial motion in limine to exclude the evidence in question. 39 In addition, it has been held that formal notice is not necessarily required if the opposing party knew the proponent planned to offer the evidence under the residual exception. 40

§ 687 Statements of child victims of abuse

--

The residual hearsay exceptions are an appropriate method to admit children's statements from sexual assault cases if the statements are otherwise proven sufficiently trustworthy.

41 The residual exception has been held to justify the admissibility of statements by child abuse victims to law enforcement officials or social workers. 42 The interests of justice are served by the admission into testimony of such statements because it is of debatable propriety to require extremely young victims of abuse to take the stand as the only method for putting before the jury what is in all probability the only firsthand account, other than that of the defendant, of the circumstances of abuse. 43 The matter of determining whether to admit hearsay should be kept from the jury; this legal determination that the court makes should be done before the evidence is presented to the jury. 44

§ 687 ----Statements of child victims of abuse [SUPPLEMENT]

Practice Aids: Alabama's child hearsay exception, 47 Ala LR 1:215 (1995).

Case authorities:

Child sexual abuse victims' statements to social workers had ample guarantees of trustworthiness and thus were admissible under catchall exception to hearsay rule; social workers all had extensive experience interviewing abused children, two initial interviewers used interview techniques based on open- ended, nonsuggestive questions to determine whether abuse had occurred, children were young and used age- appropriate language during their interviews, interview in one case followed closely upon abuse and although other did not it was corroborated by and consistent with interview close in time to incident, and victims' descriptions of incidents were essentially consistent. United States v Juvenile NB (1995, CA8 SD) 59 F3d 771, reh, en banc, den (1995, CA8) 1995 US App LEXIS 25292.

Alleged child sexual abuse victim's statements to member of hospital's child protective committee was not admissible under medical- diagnosis exception to hearsay rule since there was no evidence indicating that child knew that her conversation "with a lady" in playroom surroundings was in any way related to medical diagnosis or treatment. United States v Faciane (1994, CMA) 40 MJ 399.

Whether hearsay statements by a young victim of an alleged sex offense are reliable enough to be admitted under the statutory hearsay exception depends on an evaluation of the totality of the circumstances surrounding the making of the statements; and some factors which are important in making this determination include the child's spontaneous and consistent repetition of the incident, the child's mental state, use of terminology unexpected of a child of similar age, and the lack of motive to fabricate. People v West (1994) 158 Ill 2d 155, 198 Ill Dec 393, 632 NE2d 1004.

There was no error in a prosecution for multiple counts of first- degree sexual offense and taking indecent liberties with a child where defendant contended that the court erred in allowing a detective to testify regarding statements made by a victim in an interview with a social worker but defendant introduced the entire videotape. State v Parker (1995) 119 NC App 328, 459 SE2d 9.

§ 688 --Special factors in determining trustworthiness

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

In addition to the factors generally considered in determining a statement's trustworthiness for admission, 45 in cases involving child victims of abuse courts have considered—

—possible suggestiveness created by leading questions, particularly by a parent or close authority figure. 46

—whether the child understands the need to tell the truth and has the ability to observe, recollect, and narrate. 47

—whether the child made the statements spontaneously in his own terminology or whether evidence exists of prior prompting or manipulation by adults. 48

—whether the child's statement is clear and unambiguous and rises to the needed level of certainty. 49

—whether the statement describes an event that the child of the victim's age could not be expected to fabricate. 50

—whether any other event occurred between the time of the abuse and the time of the statement which could account for the contents of the statement. 51

The individual statements are the proper focus of the inquiry and it is error for the trial court to admit all statements of a particular child based on its assessment of the child's reliability rather than its assessment of the reliability of each statement. 52 Further, adequate indicia of reliability must be found in reference to circumstances surrounding the making of the out of court statement and not from subsequent corroboration of the criminal act; the circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness on which the various specific exceptions to the hearsay rules are based are those that existed at the time the statement was made and do not include those that may be added in using hindsight. 53 Admissibility has been considered particularly clear where the victim testifies at trial, is subject to cross-examination, and is given an opportunity to explain to the jury any changes in his account of the incidents in question. 54

In some jurisdictions and under the Uniform Rules of Evidence, 55 a special exception has been created specifically permitting the admission of statements made by child victims of abuse where those statements have circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness similar to those required for admission under the residual exceptions. 56 It has been held that a child victims statute constitutes the exclusive basis for admitting a child victim's hearsay statement of a sexual act committed against the child when the hearsay statement is not otherwise admissible under any other specific hearsay exception created by the statute or court rule; thus the residual hearsay exception is not available as a backup to the child victim statute. 57 In contrast, under the Uniform Rules of Evidence, the requirements for admissibility of a statement under this rule do not preclude admissibility of the statement under any other exception to the hearsay rule. 58

§ 688 --Special factors in determining trustworthiness [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Statements made by child abuse victim to social worker should not have been admitted under exception for statements made to diagnose treatment for emotional or psychological injuries since interview took place in automobile around which other children were playing so that child had to hide anatomical pictures from other children in answering social worker's questions regarding where defendant allegedly touched him, social worker never explained her role and purpose to child, child himself did not seek her help, and there was no evidence he thought he was talking to medical professional. United States v White (1993, CA8 SD) 11 F3d 1446.

The trial court in a sexual abuse case did not err in admitting hearsay testimony of witnesses concerning statements that the victim made to them which identified defendant as the person who sexually abused her, since the victim's limited testimony showed that she was neither cooperative nor responsive and was therefore "unavailable" for purposes of testifying at trial; given her unavailability and the evidentiary importance of her statements, the hearsay testimony of the witnesses was "necessary"; and defendant did not dispute that the State established the inherent trustworthiness of the original declaration. State v Ward (1995) 118 NC App 389, 455 SE2d 666.

Statements made by six-year-old sexual assault victim to child abuse counselor three hours after assault were admissible in alleged perpetrator's trial, since statements were made in response to counselor's very open-ended questions, victim had sustained overwhelming emotional trauma and significant physical injuries, and facts recited by victim were corroborated in every essential respect. State v Smith (1995, Utah) 909 P2d 236, 280 Utah Adv Rep 6.

Circumstantial guarantees of reliability were not shown where statements of a child accusing another of sexually abusing her were not spontaneous and where the child's past history raised the possibility that her particular knowledge of intimate sexual acts as described in the hearsay statement could have come from sources other than the accused and where there was evidence tending to show that the child might have had improper motivations to make her accusations against the accused. State v Allen, 157 Ariz 165, 755 P2d 1153, 9 Ariz Adv Rep 8.

b. Declarant Unavailable [690-703]

(1). In General [690, 691]

§ 690 Generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

The Federal and Uniform rules collect and treat, under one rule, a series of exceptions to the hearsay rule that apply only where the declarant is shown to be unavailable, and provide that hearsay evidence meeting the requirements of those exceptions is not excluded by the hearsay rule. 60 Under this rule, where the declarant is shown to be unavailable, testimony as to statements which fall in to the following categories may be admissible:

- (1) the former testimony of a witness; 61
- (2) statements made by a declarant under belief of impending death; 62
- (3) statements against interest; 63 and
- (4) statements of personal or family history. 64

§ 690 ----Generally [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

In prosecution for sexual offenses, involving several boys that defendant had taken into his home, in which defendant sought to introduce grand jury testimony of allegedly unavailable witness under prior recorded testimony exception to hearsay rule, government had requisite opportunity to cross-examine witness when he appeared before grand jury, and prosecutor's actual questioning of witness before grand jury comported with principal purpose of cross-examination. Accordingly, since two other requisite elements under prior recorded testimony exception were met—witness' grand jury testimony was given under oath and there was identity of issues in two proceedings—trial judge abused his discretion in excluding transcript of testimony, unless witness had not been shown to be unavailable to testify at trial. Although trial judge appeared to accept defense counsel's proffer of witness' unavailability, he did not make explicit finding. Feaster v United States (1993, Dist Col App) 631 A2d 400.

In prosecution for criminal vehicular operation and driving while intoxicated, arising out of fatal accident involving defendant's van, trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding report that had been prepared by expert, who had been hired by defendant's insurance company to examine van, although expert had removed van's motor mounts and prepared report stating that defective motor mounts could have caused uncontrollable acceleration, and although expert died before trial and his supervisor inadvertently threw away motor mounts, where expert was not under oath and there was no opportunity for state to cross-examine him at time he prepared report. Whether witness was under oath, how close in time statement was made to incident giving rise to statement and ability of opposing party to cross-examine witness at time of statement are factors to consider in determining whether statements by unavailable witness are sufficiently trustworthy to justify admission under Rule 804(b)(5). State v Jaworsky (1993, Minn App) 505 NW2d 638, review den (Minn) 1993 Minn LEXIS 674.

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting police officer's videotaped interview with nine-year-old victim at defendant's second trial on sexual abuse charges, where (1) victim was unavailable to testify at second trial, (2) videotaped interview contained guarantees of trustworthiness, namely, non-leading nature of most questions, use of age-appropriate language by boy, and his good memory of details, and (3) moreover, officer testified at both trials, as well as at omnibus hearing, and defense thus had ample opportunity to cross-examine officer and expose weaknesses in victim's report of sexual abuse. Moreover, court did not abuse its discretion in admitting videotaped testimony of victim's sister alleging that defendant had also abused her; court concluded that sister's videotaped testimony was clear and convincing evidence of another crime committed by defendant and was relevant to show opportunity and common scheme. State v Lonergan (1993, Minn App) 505 NW2d 349, review den (Minn) 1993 Minn LEXIS 711.

The trial court made a sufficient preliminary finding that the declarant (a murder victim) was unavailable to testify for the admission under Rule 804 of hearsay testimony by various witnesses who related statements of the victim about threats defendant made against her and her fear of him where ample evidence about the victim's death was presented by the State before the testimony of any of these witnesses; the trial court stated that the issue was "the believability of the declarant . . . [w]ho is unavailable"; and written orders admitting the testimony specified that the statements were those "of the decedent." N.C.G.S. § 8C-1, Rule 804. State v Baker (1994) 338 NC 526, 451 SE2d 574.

The trial court's conclusion that a murder victim's statements to six witnesses concerning defendant's threats and her fear of defendant possessed circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness was supported by the court's findings that a confidential and trusting relationship existed between the victim and five of the witnesses and that the sixth witness was a law officer acting in the performance of his duty when the victim made the statements to him. State v Baker (1994) 338 NC 526, 451 SE2d 574.

The trial court's omission of the rule number from its written orders admitting a murder victim's hearsay statements to certain witnesses was harmless where it is clear from the transcript and nearly identical findings and conclusions in all of the written orders that the testimony was admitted pursuant to N.C.G.S. § 8C-1, Rule 804(b)(5). State v Baker (1994) 338 NC 526, 451 SE2d 574.

In personal injury action by employee against employer, trial court properly admitted deposition testimony of employer's witness, where witness was more than 100 miles from place of trial, and where witness ignored subpoena to testify at trial. Riggi v Control

§ 691 Statements of personal or family history

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

There is a long established pedigree exception to the hearsay rule with regard to declarations of deceased members of a family offered as proof of genealogical and other issues connected with the history of the family, such as the legitimacy or parentage of a child. 65 This exception is codified in the Federal and Uniform rules of Evidence, and applies not only where the declarant is deceased, but also where he or she is otherwise unavailable within the rule. 66 Thus, where the declarant is unavailable, a statement concerning the declarant's own birth, adoption, marriage, divorce, legitimacy, relationship by blood, adoption, or marriage, ancestry, or other similar fact of personal or family history is admissible even though the declarant had no means of acquiring personal knowledge of the matter stated. 67 Further, declarations as to another person's pedigree or other fact of personal or family history may be admitted if the declarant is related to the other by blood, adoption, or marriage or is so intimately associated with the other's family as to be likely to have accurate information concerning the matter declared.

68 The statements encompassed by this rule relate only to matters of pedigree, such as date of birth, marriage, death, and the fact and degree of family relationships. 69 However, evidence as to highly debatable or complex matters such as motive or purpose is not within the scope of this exception, which is concerned with facts. 70 It is no longer required that a declaration in this area must have been made before the litigation, since such a concern bears more on weight than admissibility. 71 The alleged relationship does not have to be shown by other evidence in addition to the statement of the alleged relative. 72

(2). Definition of Unavailability [692-700]

§ 692 Generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

A declarant is considered unavailable as a witness under the hearsay rule in five specific situations. 73 The determination of unavailability is a question for the court and is reviewable on appeal only for abuse of discretion. 74 The proponent of hearsay evidence has the burden of proving the unavailability of the witness. 75 A showing of unavailability must be based on testimony of witnesses rather than hearsay not under oath unless unavailability is conceded by the party against whom the statement is being offered. 76

"Witness unavailable" hearsay exceptions do not apply when unavailability of witnesses is due solely to limit imposed by court. 77 In addition, the unavailability of an individual to testify cannot be premised solely on fact that proponent of testimony does not feel the declarant's presence is necessary. 78

§ 693 Exemption on ground of privilege

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

If a court ruling exempts the declarant on the ground of privilege from testifying to the subject matter of the declarant's statement, the declarant is unavailable for the purposes of the hearsay rule. 79

◆ Caution: A court may decline to rule a witness unavailable where the party seeking to introduce the witness' hearsay statement does not make a record of his efforts to produce the witness and does not subpoena the witness or ask the court for a ruling as to unavailability on account of privilege or for an order to testify. 80

Generally, a witness is only considered unavailable when his or her claim of privilege has been sustained by the court; 81 mere advice by an attorney to invoke a privilege, 82 the witness' invocation of the privilege, 83 or the mere suggestion that the absent declarant might attempt to exercise a privilege against testifying, 84 is not sufficient absent a definitive ruling. 85 In addition, it is ordinarily necessary for the party seeking to invoke the privilege exception to the hearsay rule to first call the witness and ask the questions, thereby compelling the witness to make a formal claim of privilege. 86 However, it has been held these requirements need not be met where fulfillment would be a mere formalism and where it is clear from the record that the court assumed a proper claim of the privilege had been made. 87

Witnesses have been considered unavailable when exempted from testifying on the grounds, inter alia, of marital privilege 88 and the privilege against self-incrimination. 89 Once a witness claims he will invoke his Fifth Amendment privilege, the state in a criminal case does not have the duty of attempting to obtain a waiver of the privilege by granting the witness immunity, by plea negotiations, or by some other means, as a good-faith effort to make the witness available to testify; such a requirement is applicable to a witness who is physically absent, but not to one who has exercised its Fifth Amendment. 90 The status of a witness as a codefendant renders the witness unavailable, even where he has entered a plea of nolo contendere, because the codefendant retains his Fifth Amendment rights until he is sentenced. 91

§ 694 Persistent refusal to testify

A witness is considered unavailable for the purpose of the hearsay rule when the witness is placed on the stand, and declines to testify despite a court order to do so. 92 The same rule applies under the Federal Rules of Evidence and in states adopting the Uniform Rules of Evidence. 93 An order by the court for the witness to testify is an essential prerequisite to the invocation of this rule. 94 No written order is necessary and an oral order, such as one given in the court's conversation with the witness out of the presence of the jury, is sufficient to meet the order requirement. 95 Where a witness claims a privilege but the court deems the privilege improperly invoked, the witness may be deemed unavailable after the court, outside the jury's presence, first directs the witness to testify and then admonishes him that his continued refusal to testify is punishable by contempt. 96 It is not required that the judge hold a witness in contempt for refusing to testify before finding that witness unavailable. 97 If the declarant refuses to testify despite a grant of use immunity 98 or a plea bargain given in return for expected testimony, 99 the declarant is unavailable, although the government does not have to go so far as to grant immunity to a declarant who has otherwise refused to testify, before seeking admission of a hearsay statement. 1 If the attorney for a prosecution witness charged with giving perjured testimony to obtain a conviction indicates that the witness would refuse to testify at a habeas corpus proceeding even if compelled to do so, such witness would be considered unavailable. 2

§ 695 Lack of memory

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

A witness is unavailable for the purpose of the hearsay exceptions where he testifies to a lack of memory on the subject of his statement. 3 Unlike the other four unavailability situations provided for by the rule, the declarant in this situation must establish by his own testimony his lack of memory and hence his unavailability as a witness with respect to the statement in question. 4 If the witness can remember the general subject matter of a conversation, although not its details, he will not be deemed unavailable. 5 The crucial factor is not the unavailability of the witness but rather the unavailability of his testimony. 6

While the court may choose to disbelieve the declarant's testimony as to a lack of memory, 7 the witness' claim of a lack of memory will generally be deemed sufficient if supported by corroborating circumstances. 8 In some jurisdictions, it has been held that the rule applies even where it appears or the trial court believes that the witness is not telling the truth. 9

◆ Observation: It has been held that there is no internal inconsistency in an interpretation of the Federal Rules of Evidence which deems a witness who is unable to testify concerning the basis for a prior identification statement because of a memory loss both "subject to cross-examination" regarding his or her prior statements 10 and "unavailable" so that hearsay evidence may be used; 11 the characterization of a witness being subject to cross-examination and that of a witness being unavailable are made for two entirely different purposes and there is no expectation that they should coincide. 12

§ 696 Death or physical or mental infirmity

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

If the declarant is unable to be present or to testify at the hearing because of death ¹³ or then existing physical illness, mental illness, or infirmity, ¹⁴ the declarant is considered unavailable under the hearsay rules. ¹⁵ The existence of the infirmity should be established by the testimony of a medical witness ¹⁶ or by affidavit. ¹⁷ Thus, the prerequisite of unavailability is not established where the court finds that counsel has never spoken to the witness and there are no affidavits or other information supporting the assertion of medical disability other than counsel's allegation of physical infirmity. ¹⁸ The following factors are relevant to the determination of whether victim witness is unavailable because testifying will cause psychological trauma or disability: the probability of psychological injury as a result of testifying; the degree of anticipated injuries; the duration of the injury; and whether the expected psychological injury is substantially greater than the reaction of the average victim of a violent act. ¹⁹

Incompetency of a minor may also be an infirmity for which the witness will be considered unavailable. ²⁰ However, a child's out of court declaration is not automatically rendered inadmissible merely because the child was found not competent at the competency hearing. ²¹ The unavailability requirement can be met when the court makes a particularized finding that the child's emotional or psychological health will be substantially impaired if he or she were forced to testify and such impairment will be long standing rather than transitory in nature. ²² Mere inconvenience or discomfort at the prospect of testifying does not meet the statutory standard of unavailability. ²³ However, where the child's testimony is taken before the court with participation by both attorneys and video taped just as it would have been had the child been physically present at the trial, the introduction of the video tape is equivalent to the child's having personally testified. ²⁴

The trial court may consider the expected duration of the illness and grant an adjournment if the witness can be expected to recover within a reasonable time. 25

§ 697 Absent witness whose attendance proponent is unable to procure

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

A declarant is considered unavailable as a witness for the purposes of the hearsay rules if the declarant is absent from the hearing and the proponent of his statement has been unable to procure his attendance by process or other reasonable means. 26 Where an exception is invoked for statements made under belief of impending death, statements against interest, or statements of personal or family history, the declarant is considered unavailable where his attendance or his testimony cannot be procured. 27 The provision regarding procurement of the declarant's testimony is designed primarily to require that an attempt be made to depose a witness as a precondition to the witness being deemed unavailable. 28

This definition of unavailability is concerned with the absence of testimony rather than the physical absence of the declarant. Where the declarant's deposition is available, the declarant is not unavailable within the meaning of the rule. 29 An objection to admission of the hearsay on the ground of unavailability is sufficiently raised by mentioning the availability of the declarant's deposition. 30

The fact that a declarant is in the Federal Witness Protection Program may lead to a determination that the declarant is unavailable. 31 By contrast, where a court agrees to issue a writ of habeas corpus to secure the presence of a declarant who is incarcerated in a federal penitentiary, the unavailability requirement is no longer met. 32

§ 698 --Showing of good faith effort to procure attendance or testimony

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

To take advantage of the hearsay exceptions requiring unavailability, the proponent must show a good-faith, genuine, and bona fide effort to procure the declarant's attendance. 33 This requirement is consistent with the recognized exception to the constitutional right of confrontation of witnesses. 34 The court will consider the timing of efforts to procure the declarant's attendance as an element of the reasonableness of the effort. 35 The court must be informed of when the prosecution learned that the witness might not appear and of the steps taken to secure the witness's presence after the likelihood of nonappearance became known. 36 However, the proponent's burden is to demonstrate diligent effort, not to do everything conceivable to secure the witness. 37 If reasonable efforts are made to find the declarant, 38 or if production of the declarant would be overly burdensome to the proponent, 39 the proponent is excused. The proponent will not be required to make efforts at procuring the declarant's attendance which obviously would be futile. 40 However, it has been held that the possibility of failure or of a formidable search does not justify a failure to go beyond cursory threshold inquiries. 41

The question whether due diligence was demonstrated is a factual question to be determined by the trial court according to the circumstances in each case. 42 The record should disclose with particularity what steps were taken to secure the presence of the witness before a finding of unavailability can be made based on the failure of reasonable efforts. 43 Generally, it is within the discretion of the trial court to accept or reject counsel's representations on unavailability. 44 The trial court's ruling will not be disturbed unless an abuse of discretion appears. 45

§ 698 --Showing of good faith effort to procure attendance or testimony

Case authorities:

There was no error in a first-degree murder prosecution where the court admitted the statement of an absent witness to officers. The evidence showed that the witness made a statement to officers and moved to Philadelphia; the prosecutor filed a petition and the court entered a motion several weeks before the trial that the witness be taken into custody and delivered to a North Carolina officer to assure her attendance at trial; an officer went to Philadelphia a few days before the trial and went to the address he had been given with an officer of the Philadelphia police department; the witness's mother told them that the witness had moved and that she did not know the new address or telephone number; and the officers searched the house but could not find the witness. The court could conclude from this evidence that the witness was absent from trial and that the State was unable to secure her presence by process or other reasonable means. A witness who testified at a preliminary hearing is not unavailable at trial so as to dispense with the accused's right to confrontation, even though the witness was in a federal prison in another state so that the prosecution would have to request an exercise of discretion on the part of federal authorities in making the witness available, where the prosecution made no good-faith effort to obtain the witness' presence at the trial. Barber v Page, 390 US 719, 20 L Ed 2d 255, 88 S Ct 1318.

Government used reasonable means to assure attendance of witnesses suspected of being illegal aliens where, after deposing them, it requested them to return for trial, instructed them how to return and how to obtain necessary monies to return and they promised to return but failed to do so; the fact that means utilized were unsuccessful does not mean that the government's efforts were not made in good faith. United States v Eufrazio-Torres (CA10 Kan) 890 F2d 266, 29 Fed Rules Evid Serv 369, cert den 494 US 1008, 108 L Ed 2d 482, 110 S Ct 1306.

Even where the proponent of the evidence does not send someone to another state or city to look for the missing witness, the proponent can satisfy the burden of showing unavailability where the proponent has contacted the FBI, Police Department, and Welfare Department in order to search for the individual, where the absent witness stated that he had no address or phone number and that he was living in the streets; where none of the witness's friends or relatives knew where he was; where a one year search by a relative who was also a police officer proved unsuccessful; and where the witness strongly resisted revealing his location. Mitchell v State (Miss) 572 So 2d 865.

Witness was unavailable where the witness was the brother of the plaintiff and had allegedly assured the plaintiff of his presence at the trial but where the plaintiff testified that he was simply unable to locate his brother prior to and during the trial; the court accepted the plaintiff's argument that due diligence did not require the issuance of a subpoena because both the plaintiff and plaintiff's counsel believed that it would not be necessary to subpoena a family member to secure his attendance at trial. Barrett v Asarco, Inc., 245 Mont 196, 799 P2d 1078, 117 CCH LC ¶ 56486.

§ 699 --Declarant outside court's jurisdiction

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

While the fact that the declarant is outside the reach of the court's process is a factor to be considered in determining whether an absent witness is unavailable under the hearsay exceptions, 46 even where the declarant is beyond the court's jurisdiction the proponent must show that it has made a diligent effort to secure his or her attendance. 47

The courts recognize that obtaining the presence of declarants who are outside the United States may involve particular difficulties. 48

◆ Observation: Prosecutors in states which have enacted the Uniform Act to Secure Attendance of Witnesses From Without the State face a dilemma in showing a good-faith effort to produce the presence of reluctant witnesses. Serving the witness with a subpoena may cause the witness to flee, while not serving the subpoena may be looked upon as a lack of bona fide effort to obtain the testimony. The remaining option, taking the material witness into custody, is constitutionally questionable where the custody is lengthy. In such cases, the better tactical course may be to use means other than the Uniform Act, such as relying on an informal agreement with the witness or with a parent of the witness to procure the testimony. 49 If, after a reasoned decision not to invoke the Uniform Act in the belief that the witness is more likely to testify on the basis of an informal agreement rather than under the compulsion of a subpoena, the witness nevertheless disappears before trial, subsequent efforts to locate him may be deemed by the court to be sufficient to show a bona fide effort to procure the witness' attendance. 50

§ 700 Effect of proponent's wrongdoing

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

The hearsay exceptions do not apply if the declarant is unavailable as a witness due to the procurement or wrongdoing of the statement's proponent by conduct designed to prevent the witness from attending or testifying. 51 The rule against the proponent's misconduct in securing a witness' unavailability does not apply unless the proponent's action was taken for the purpose of preventing testimony. 52 Aliens who have been deported prior to the prosecution of an accused for harboring illegal aliens are unavailable witnesses because the deportation is not procured by the government for the purpose of preventing them from testifying. 53 However, the government cannot point to an unqualified and unjustified refusal by the Immigration and Naturalization Service to stay the deportation of a witness as a sufficient reason for permitting the use of depositions in order to secure a conviction. 54

When a witness refuses to testify at trial on the ground that the government has breached a plea agreement with him, the witness' absence has not resulted from procurement or wrongdoing of the government for the purpose of preventing the witness from attending or testifying, because the government's actions to which the witness objects are not taken for the purpose of preventing the witness from testifying. 55

A criminal defendant could not declare himself unavailable by invoking his Fifth Amendment privilege where such steps were taken in order to qualify himself as an unavailable witness and to make prior testimony of his admissible into evidence; because the declarant and the proponent of the evidence were the same individual, the proponent of the evidence was considered to be the cause of the unavailability of the witness. State v Wiley, 223 Neb 835, 394 NW2d 641; People v Edwards, 54 Cal 3d 787, 1 Cal Rptr 2d 696, 819 P2d 436, 91 Daily Journal DAR 14485, reh den (Cal) 1992 Cal LEXIS 319 and stay gr (May 13, 1992) and cert den (US) 121 L Ed 2d 80, 113 S Ct 125, reh den (US) 121 L Ed 2d 572, 113 S Ct 642 and stay gr (Cal) 1993 Cal LEXIS 418, motion den (Cal) 1993 Cal LEXIS 2925, habeas corpus den, motion den (Cal) 1993 Cal LEXIS 4800, stay den (Cal) 1993 Cal LEXIS 5831, petition for certiorari filed (December 14, 1993).

(3). Residual Exception [701-703]

§ 701 Admissibility of other statements having circumstantial guaranties of trustworthiness

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Hearsay statements not covered by any of the specific exceptions to the hearsay rule are admissible where they have circumstantial guaranties of trustworthiness. 56

Basically, the same standards and evidentiary principles apply to the residual exception associated with exceptions where the declarant's availability is immaterial and the residual exception associated with the "declarant unavailable" exceptions. 57

Congress did not intend to create a broad new hearsay exception, and thus the residual exceptions may be used only in exceptional circumstances. 58 The residual exception cannot be employed as a means of circumventing requirements of other rules, such as to provide for admission of transcript of earlier criminal proceeding against the defendant, which is specifically covered under the former testimony exception. 59

A statement is admissible under the residual exception if the court determines that (1) the statement is offered as evidence of a material fact; 60 (2) the statement is more probative on the point for which it is offered than any other evidence which the proponent can procure through reasonable efforts; and (3) the general purposes of the rules of evidence and the interests of justice will best be served by admission of the statement into evidence. 61

Courts will not admit evidence under the residual hearsay exception where it would not be difficult to go behind the proffered hearsay to obtain more solid evidence. 62 The testimony of live witnesses is preferred over hearsay, and may be preferred even where the live defendant is less credible than the deceased declarant. 63 On the other hand, the probativeness requirement does not mean that the evidence must be essential to be admissible; it is enough that it is the most probative evidence reasonably available. 64 Although the common-law exception for statements by persons in privity of estate, interest, or obligation is not included among the classes of admissions defined as nonhearsay, 65 there is some basis for admitting such statements under the residual exception. 66

◆ Caution: The constitutional right of confrontation of witnesses 67 is distinct from the rules of hearsay, and thus admissibility under the residual exception does not necessarily satisfy the Confrontation Clause. 68 The residual exception must be applied stringently in criminal cases because of confrontation concerns; guaranties of reliability are necessary to guard against admitting hearsay which is not subject to the usual safeguard of cross-examination at trial. 69 Thus, hearsay statements of an unavailable declarant which do not fall within a firmly rooted hearsay exception are admissible only if supported by particularized guaranties of trustworthiness so that they don't violate the constitutional confrontation clause. 70 The admission of sworn grand jury testimony is not a violation of the confrontation clause if it bears sufficient guaranties of reliability and the circumstances supply a sufficient basis for the jury to assess its trustworthiness. 71

◆ Comment: The so-called "Near Miss" theory—under which hearsay evidence may only be offered under the exception that most nearly describes it and under which such hearsay evidence cannot be offered under the residual exception if it is excluded under the exception that most nearly describes it—has been rejected by a court which stated that the residual exception is not dependent on other exceptions for its meaning and that the "Near Miss" theory puts the federal evidence rules back into the straightjacket from which the residual exceptions were intended to free them. 72

§ 701 ----Admissibility of other statements having circumstantial guaranties of trustworthiness [SUPPLEMENT]

Practice Aids: The residual exception to the hearsay rule: Form follows substance, 22 Col Law 1197 (1993).

The residual hearsay exception reconsidered, 20 Fla St U LR 787 (1993).

When do corroborating circumstances clearly indicate trustworthiness of hearsay statement tending to expose declarant to criminal liability and offered to exculpate accused, so as to permit admission of statement under Rule 804(b)(3) of Federal Rules of Evidence (28 USCS Appx). 125 ALR Fed 477.

Case authorities:

In prosecution for RICO offenses, tape recorded statement of witness, who was murdered before trial, allegedly exculpating defendants accused of particular burglary was not trustworthy enough to be admitted under residual hearsay rule, where statement was made at time witness was cooperating with government and wearing wire during continuing investigation, was not made shortly after robbery, and lacked corroboration. United States v DeVillio (1993, CA2 NY) 983 F2d 1185.

Testimony from codefendant's trial of witness who refused to testify at defendant's trial was improperly admitted under residual hearsay exception, even though witness testified under oath, where cross-examination of witness by codefendant's attorney did not satisfy rule, since codefendant was charged with same crimes as defendant and had an obvious incentive to implicate defendant, and no incentive to draw out any testimony that might exculpate defendant; fact that witness might have been defendant's friend did not guarantee trustworthiness, and witness' version of incident had not remained consistent from time of statement to police to time of testimony at codefendant's trial. State v Luzanilla (1994, Ariz) 880 P2d 611, 169 Ariz Adv Rep 24.

Hearsay evidence not admissible at the defendant's postconviction hearing on the basis of hearsay objections also was not admissible to satisfy due process considerations, where the defendant, who was convicted of first-degree murder and sentenced to death, attempted to present evidence that his former cellmates, who had testified against him at trial but were no longer available as witnesses, had acted in concert with the state to obtain incriminating statements from the defendant and to testify falsely at trial, because the statements did not bear indicia of reliability, were not made spontaneously, were largely uncorroborated, and were not unquestionably against the witnesses' interest. Lightbourne v State (1994, Fla) 644 So 2d 54, 19 FLW S 331, cert den (US) 1995 US LEXIS 2312.

The trial court did not err by finding that hearsay statements made to an officer by an unavailable witness who refused to testify possessed sufficient guarantees of trustworthiness to be constitutionally admissible in a murder trial under Rule 804(b)(5) where the evidence tended to show that the witness described events about which only she could have known; the witness had no motivation other than to speak the truth; the only information supplied by the officer to the witness was the number of the trailer where the events occurred; the witness made statements against her penal interest wherein she referred to her use of illegal drugs and participation in prostitution; the witness was incarcerated for much of the time between the interview and the trial and never attempted to recant her statement during a two-year period; and the statement to the officer was recorded. GS § 8C-1, Rule 804(a)(2). State v Peterson (1994) 337 NC 384, 446 SE2d 43.

Two statements made by a murder victim's wife to a police detective possessed equivalent circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness for their admission into evidence at defendant's murder trial under the residual hearsay exception set forth in Rule 804(b)(5) where the wife later died from AIDS; the wife gave her first statement only one week after the murder; she freely admitted the nature of her relationship with defendant and described how the victim armed himself with a knife before leaving her home when he learned that defendant was outside the home, which could support an inference that the victim provoked defendant; the wife was near death at the time of her second, tape-recorded statement; she could no longer work, was often bed-ridden, and believed in good faith she would not be strong enough to testify even if she were alive at the time of the trial; and the statements mirrored each other in all respects. Furthermore, this evidence showed that the victim's wife was worthy of belief so that admission of the statements did not violate the Confrontation Clause of the Sixth Amendment. N.C.G.S. § 8C-1, Rule 804(b)(5). State v Brown (1994) 339 NC 426, 451 SE2d 181, petition for certiorari filed (Mar 29, 1995).

Statements made by a murder victim to a witness and in a letter to defendant concerning abuse she suffered from defendant were properly admitted in defendant's murder trial under the residual exception to the hearsay rule set forth in G.S. § 8C-1, Rule 804(b)(5). The trial court properly found that the statements were probative of a material fact in that they were evidence of motive, identity and intent. Error by the trial court in failing to make findings of fact to support its conclusion that the statements possessed the requisite trustworthiness was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt where the record sustains the court's conclusion and contains overwhelming evidence of defendant's guilt, including his confession, DNA test results, and blood-type matching. State v Daughtry (1995) 340 NC 488, 459 SE2d 747.

There was no error in a prosecution for two first-degree murders where a fire inspector was allowed to read to the jury a statement from a vagrant who could not be located at the time of the trial and who had been living in a vacant house where one of the victims was found. The statement contained sufficient indicia of reliability to be admissible in that the vagrant had personal knowledge of the underlying event, there is no evidence that he had any reason to tell the fire inspector anything other than the truth, and there is no evidence that he ever recanted this statement. Even if the admission of this testimony was erroneous, defendant cannot show prejudice in light of his incriminating remarks to several others stating that he killed this victim. State v Chapman (1995) 342 NC 330, 464 SE2d 661.

In prosecution for theft and burglary, trial court did not err in refusing to admit into evidence, under Rule 804(b)(5), affidavit prepared by defendant's father-in-law prior to his death which stated that he saw defendant at his residence on night of burglaries. In view of fact that defendant's wife testified at least five times that she saw and heard defendant, and defendant provided testimony from four other witnesses concerning his whereabouts on night in question, trial court did not abuse its discretion in determining that father-in-law's affidavit was not more probative than any other evidence that defendant could reasonably obtain. State v Horton (1993, Utah App) 848 P2d 708, 207 Utah Adv Rep 48.

§ 702 Showing of trustworthiness

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

The main requirement of the residual exception is that the hearsay statement have circumstantial guaranties of trustworthiness equivalent to those of the firmly established hearsay exceptions. 73 The evidence should be reliable within the spirit rather than in the letter of similar exceptions. 74 The trial court has discretion in determining the trustworthiness of statements admitted under the residual exception, 75 although the discretion is not unfettered but is designed to deal with unanticipated situations which demonstrate trustworthiness within the spirit of the specifically stated exceptions. 76

The question of trustworthiness does not involve whether the witness's statement is trustworthy, but instead whether the declarant's statement as reported by the witness is trustworthy. 77 The particularized guarantees of trustworthiness must be shown from the totality of the circumstances, but the relevant circumstances include only those that surround the making of the statement and that render the declarant particularly worthy of belief; the circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness on which the various specific exceptions to the hearsay rule are based are those that existed at the time the statement was made and do not include those that may be added by using hindsight. 78 It has been held that corroborative evidence of the truth of a hearsay statement is irrelevant to the consideration of its admissibility as trustworthy evidence under the residual exception, because corroboration is irrelevant in the case of specific exceptions and the residual exception requires an equivalent guaranty of trustworthiness. 79 Further, to be admissible under the Confrontation Clause, hearsay evidence offered in a criminal trial must possess indicia of reliability by virtue of its inherent trustworthiness, not by reference to corroborating evidence at trial, where the use of corroboration to support a hearsay statement's particularized guarantees of trustworthiness would permit the admission of a presumptively unreliable statement by bootstrapping on the trustworthiness of other evidence at trial. 80

In determining a statement's trustworthiness, the court must also consider the circumstances in which the declarant made the statement, the incentive he had to speak truthfully or falsely, and factors bearing on the reliability of the reporting of the hearsay by the witness. 81 Other indications of reliability include the relative contemporaneousness of the statement to the event in question; 82 the presence of oath or cross examination; the ability of a declarant to perceive clearly, and the amount of time between event and declaration. 83 The fact that the declarant is a disinterested party does not by itself satisfy the requirements of circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness. 84

In determining whether grand jury testimony possesses circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness justifying its admission under the residual exception, the court will consider the declarant's relationship with both the government and the defendant, the declarant's motivation to testify before the grand jury, the extent to which the testimony reflects the declarant's personal knowledge, whether the declarant has ever recanted the testimony, and the existence of corroborating evidence available for cross-examination. 85

The statements of unavailable witnesses have been held admissible upon a finding of trustworthiness where—

- government agents took elaborate steps to assure themselves that a narcotics informant was not deceiving them, despite his prior criminal record. 86

- an account of a cocaine transaction in which the declarant participated indicated no reliance upon potentially erroneous secondary information. 87

- statements were made by a deceased federal agent 30 minutes after the events in question, the time frame indicated a lack of confusion, and circumstances showed that the declarant had every incentive to report truthfully because his life and the lives of fellow agents were at stake. 88

- the decedent told disinterested third parties, as well as his wife and police investigators, that the defendant had threatened to kill him. 89

- the declarant's statements before a grand jury were given under a grant of immunity, thereby giving the witness no motive to implicate the defendant and exculpate herself, were offered for the limited purpose of refuting the defendant's alibi, and concerned events about which the witness had personal knowledge. 90

- the statements were provided by a witness under a grant of immunity who had a civil suit pending against the defendant, which would have been compromised by inconsistent statements before the grand jury. 91

- the mere fact that the declarant volunteered to testify before a grand jury after her marriage to defendant deteriorated to the point of divorce did not call her credibility into question to such an extent that admission of her testimony was erroneous. 92

On the other hand, the trustworthiness requirement has been held not satisfied by grand jury testimony drawn from the witness by the prosecutor's leading questions and threats of a contempt citation. 93

The trustworthiness requirement has also been held to be not satisfied in cases where—

- a declarant who had been subpoenaed by a grand jury and had been informed that the grand jury was investigating the crime in which he was implicated made a secretly tape-recorded statement offered by 3 codefendants in which the declarant denied knowledge of the crime in question. 94

- an interview was given under a grant of use immunity, on the ground that the grant of immunity may have encouraged the conscious or unconscious embellishment of the recollection of the witness. 95

—a letter allegedly written by a district sales manager denying discriminatory remarks was offered but there were no assurances that the sales manager in fact wrote or authorized the disputed letter and the defendant did not attempt to establish the letter's authenticity. 96

—an affidavit was contradicted by oral statements and where, despite the affiant's long association with the defendant, the affidavit was tentative in its description of him. 97

—the statement consisted of a written confession by an accomplice, implicating the defendant and made during plea bargaining. 98

Case authorities:

In prosecution for RICO offenses, tape recorded statement of witness, who was murdered before trial, allegedly exculpating defendants accused of particular burglary was not trustworthy enough to be admitted under residual hearsay rule, where statement was made at time witness was cooperating with government and wearing wire during continuing investigation, was not made shortly after robbery, and lacked corroboration. United States v DeVillio (1993, CA2 NY) 983 F2d 1185.

Victim's statements to sister, ICU nurse, and detective, in form of headshakes due to inability to speak because of life-support tube in throat, and indicating identity of alleged murderer, were improperly admitted under residual hearsay exception, in that they were not inherently trustworthy, independent of other evidence at trial, where there was no showing that deceased victim had adequate opportunity to observe who committed crime. State v Jacob (1993) 242 Neb 176, 494 NW2d 109.

The trial court did not err by finding that hearsay statements made to an officer by an unavailable witness who refused to testify possessed sufficient guarantees of trustworthiness to be constitutionally admissible in a murder trial under Rule 804(b)(5) where the evidence tended to show that the witness described events about which only she could have known; the witness had no motivation other than to speak the truth; the only information supplied by the officer to the witness was the number of the trailer where the events occurred; the witness made statements against her penal interest wherein she referred to her use of illegal drugs and participation in prostitution; the witness was incarcerated for much of the time between the interview and the trial and never attempted to recant her statement during a two-year period; and the statement to the officer was recorded. Hearsay statements of a child victim of sexual abuse who did not testify at trial were not admissible through the child's therapist because the nature of the relationship between a therapist and a child client had a negative impact on the trustworthiness of the hearsay statement where the statements were not made spontaneously but were made in response to questioning by the therapist, which could involve leading questions. State v Harris, 247 Mont 405, 808 P2d 453.

A report was not reliable where the witness who reported the statements was not under oath when she was interviewed, the interview took place sometime after the incident, the statement was made during an investigation in which the statements could not be tested by cross-examination and where she admitted not paying much attention to the discussion she was reporting, and where, at the time the statement was made, she was separated from her husband who was one of the subjects of the discussion and where her desire to give the statement was strongly motivated by a monetary award associated with giving

In the prosecution of a man for the murder of his former wife, the trial court did not err in admitting an affidavit by the former wife which had been filed in the couple's divorce action; the former wife's death was caused by manual strangulation; the affidavit was dated approximately 4 months before the former wife's death; and the affidavit was drawn under the supervision of an attorney and related in part to the use of physical violence on the former wife by the husband. State v Kerkhove (SD) 423 NW2d 160.

§ 703 Advance notice of intention to use residual exception

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Before a statement may be admitted under the residual exception, the proponent must make known to the adverse party the proponent's intention to offer the statement and the particulars of it, including the name and address of the declarant. 99 Notice must be given sufficiently in advance of the trial or hearing to provide the adverse party with a fair opportunity to prepare to meet it. 1 The adverse party must be given a fair opportunity to prepare. 2 Although some jurisdictions have rigidly applied the pretrial notice requirement, 3 most courts have interpreted the requirement somewhat flexibly, in light of its express policy of providing the opposing party with a fair opportunity to meet the proffered evidence. 4 The requirement is not an inflexible barrier when peculiar circumstances militate against its invocation. 5

Thus, the failure to give pretrial notice has been excused if the proffering party was not at fault because that party could not have anticipated the need to use the evidence and if the adverse party has been deemed to have had sufficient opportunity to prepare for and contest the use of the evidence, for example because the adverse party was offered a continuance, did not request a continuance, or had the statement in advance. 6 The failure to give notice of intention to offer hearsay evidence under the residual exception may be cured by obtaining the trial court's grant of a continuance in the proceedings to permit the party entitled to advance notice an opportunity to prepare to meet newly offered evidence discovered under circumstances whose practical realities prevent compliance with the letter of the notice requirement. 7

5. Collateral Matters [704-707]

§ 704 Hearsay within hearsay

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Hearsay included within hearsay is not excluded under the hearsay rule if each part of the combined statements conforms with an exception to the hearsay rule. 8 The phrase "multiple hearsay" or "hearsay within hearsay" refers to hearsay that contains within it another level or levels of hearsay, for example a police report containing a bystander statement. 9 For instance, if the factual findings in a public document otherwise admissible are based upon hearsay, the underlying hearsay must also fit within a hearsay exception. 10 The double hearsay problem also arises when the source of the information for a business record is an outsider to the business. 11 Further, it has been held that a statement was hearsay within hearsay where a police officer sought to testify as to an interpreter's translation of a defendant's statements made while the officer was interrogating the defendant where the officer and the defendant spoke different languages. 12 In contrast, it has also been held that testimony of an IRS agent about statements made through an interpreter by the defendant's father-in-law in Greece was not inadmissible as multiple hearsay because the interpreter was no more than a language conduit and, therefore, the translation did not create an additional layer of hearsay. 13

A statement otherwise admissible as the admission of a party's agent is to be excluded if it consists primarily of a reiteration of the statement of another person who is unknown.

14 Hearsay within hearsay has been admitted as fitting within a hearsay exception of its own in cases where—

—computerized records prepared by a drug company and included in records of state human resources department were excepted as business records. 15

—a statement included in a Department of Labor report was within the hearsay exception for admissions by party opponent. 16

—an entry on a police booking card as to the defendant's place of birth incorporated three out-of-court statements admissible under separate hearsay exceptions: (1) a defendant's statement, deemed not hearsay as a statement of party against whom the statement was offered, under the exception for admissions by a party opponent; (2) a translation of a statement, excepted under the present sense impression exception; and (3) a police officer's notation, excepted as a business record. 17

—a coconspirator's translation of the defendant's statements constituting an admission of a party was admissible under the exception for coconspirators' statements. 18

—hearsay within coconspirator's statements was statement of other coconspirator. 19

◆ Observation: The admission of double hearsay is suspect under the Confrontation Clause of the Sixth Amendment, because a defense attorney cannot even cross-examine a witness concerning the reliability of the source, which relies upon the hearsay statement of another. Testimony referring to an unidentified informant's account of various hearsay statements is nonetheless admissible despite the grave possibilities for abuse. 20

§ 705 Attacking and supporting credibility of declarant

--

When a hearsay statement, or when a statement which is not hearsay but consists of certain admissions by a party opponent, has been admitted in evidence, the credibility of the declarant may be attacked, and if attacked may be supported by any evidence which would be admissible for those purposes if the declarant had testified as a witness. 21 The rule does not apply to statements admissible as statements by the party opponent himself or statements of which he has manifested his adoption because the credibility of the party opponent is always subject to attack. 22 The purpose of this rule is to permit impeachment of a declarant whose out of court statement has been admitted into evidence; it also permits cross-examination by a party calling a declarant as a witness after a hearsay statement has been admitted against that party; however the rule is limited in its application and it has no prospect for justifying the admissibility of a hearsay statement offered in the absence of these circumstances. 23

The rule extends the privilege of impeaching declarative hearsay statements but does not obliterate the rules of evidence governing how impeachment is to proceed; rather it says opposite, that counsel may use any evidence which would be admissible if declarant had testified as witness. 24 Evidence attacking the credibility of a witness is an attack on the character of the witness for truthfulness or untruthfulness; thus testimony of a witness on deposition which contradicts a declarant's other out-of-court statements but does not attack his credibility is not admissible. 25

If the accused refuses to testify, but his counsel brings out by examination of another witness the accused's consistent denial of any involvement in the alleged crime, the admission of such hearsay statements make the accused's credibility an issue in the case, thereby inviting impeachment of him by introducing evidence of his prior conviction. 26

If a party seeks to introduce a hearsay statement whose declarant is unknown, the opposing party's right to cross-examine is significantly diminished, and a court may place a heavier burden on the proponent of the evidence to satisfy the requirement of the particular exception. 27

The credibility of a defendant seeking to establish the defense of insanity will be open to attack where his statements to the psychiatrist called to establish the defense are admitted under the hearsay exception for statements made for the purpose of medical diagnosis or treatment. 28 In turn the trial court must admit testimony offered by the defense by way of rehabilitation. 29

The credibility of an out-of-court declarant, after it has been attacked, may be rehabilitated by introducing prior consistent statements relevant to repel the attack. 30

◆ Caution: When an out-of-court statement is offered for a nonhearsay purpose, so that the credibility of the declarant does not affect the probative worth of the statement, and is not within the purview of the applicable rules dealing with admissions by an opponent, 31 the adverse party is not entitled to attack the credibility of the declarant. 32

Although the State is not required to corroborate a victim's testimony, when the key witness's credibility has been put in issue, it cannot be doubted that corroborating testimony may play a substantial role in the jury's weighing of the evidence, where accused was convicted of armed burglary, 3 counts of sexual battery with a deadly weapon, and armed robbery with a firearm, and the alleged victim's credibility as to the use of a weapon was attacked by the defense, and the State sought to bolster its case by introducing impermissible hearsay testimony from a police dispatch report and victim's examining physician. Conley v State (1993, Fla) 620 So 2d 180, 18 FLW S 298.

§ 706 --Impeachment using inconsistent statements

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

It is possible that impeachment of the declarant may involve the use of a subsequent inconsistent statement, 33 as distinct from the usual situation of impeachment by prior inconsistent statements. 34 In either situation, the proponent is precluded from satisfying the usual requirement that the inconsistent statement be brought to the attention of the declarant, unless the hearsay consists of former testimony or a deposition, when the possibility of calling the inconsistent statement to the attention of the witness or deponent is not ruled out. 35 Thus evidence of a statement or conduct by the declarant at any time, inconsistent with his hearsay statement, is not subject to any requirement that he may have been afforded an opportunity to deny or explain. 36

§ 706 --Impeachment using inconsistent statements [SUPPLEMENT]

§ 707 --Impeachment of coconspirators' credibility

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Generally, impeachment is permitted of the credibility of the declarant of a statement admitted as a coconspirator statement as if that declarant had testified as a witness. 37 If a defendant seeks to offer the testimony of a coconspirator from a prior trial in which the coconspirator was the defendant, the fact that the jury in the prior trial did not believe the coconspirator, who was convicted and serving several years in jail, may also be admitted to impeach the coconspirator's testimony. 38 However, problems may arise when the coconspirator declarant whose credibility is subject to attack by evidence of prior crimes is also a codefendant. There is a danger of prejudicing the presumption of innocence of that codefendant by admission of evidence of his prior crimes, such evidence being generally inadmissible under the rule dealing with evidence of prior crimes 39 to show the character or guilt of the codefendant. 40 Circumstances may be such that the court will find that the value to each codefendant of being able to impeach the credibility of the others is less than the prejudice to each defendant of having his criminal convictions before the jury. 41 In such situations, the trial judge has the difficult task of balancing the countervailing interests of all defendants and, if evidence of prior convictions is admitted, the judge should instruct the jury that the convictions may only be used to discredit the out-of-court statements. 42

§ 707 --Impeachment of coconspirators' credibility [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

State is required, in order to support admission of conconspirator hearsay statements, to prove existence of conspiracy by fair preponderance of evidence, but need not do so by direct evidence. Commonwealth v Mayhue (1994, Pa) 639 A2d 421.

1. In General [708-713]

§ 708 Generally; definition of "confession"

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

A confession is a statement by the accused that he engaged in conduct which constitutes a crime. 1 It is a direct acknowledgement of guilt on the part of the accused, either by a statement of the details of the crime or an admission of the ultimate fact. 2

The term "confession" as used in a federal statute pertaining to admissibility of confessions in criminal prosecutions brought by the United States or the District of Columbia, 3 means any confession of guilt of any criminal offense, or any self-incriminating statement made or given orally or in writing. 4 This definition does not encompass all statements, exculpatory and otherwise, 5 so that statements by an accused which are at best exculpatory or a denial of guilt do not constitute a confession within the meaning of the statute. 6

A confession may be distinguished from conduct of the accused which tends to establish his guilt. 7 Nor does the condition of the accused's person, discovered by a physician during a physical examination, constitute a confession. 8

There can be no such thing as a confession of guilt by silence in or out of court. Thus, the unanswered allegation by another of the guilt of a defendant is not a confession of guilt on the part of the defendant. 9

§ 708 ----Generally; definition of "confession" [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Codefendants' confessions were properly excluded in murder defendant's trial as not reliable since portions arguably exculpating defendant did not inculcate codefendants and statements had been made before defendant's apprehension, by persons who had every reason to protect him since he was fellow gang member and brother of one of codefendants. Carson v Peters (1994, CA7 Ill) 42 F3d 384.

Statement is not confession unless it is full and direct acknowledgement of all elements of crime. People v Kelly (1993, Sup) 157 Misc 2d 554, 598 NYS2d 423.

In a murder prosecution, a witness was properly permitted to testify that the defendant attempted to rape her several hours after the murder and that he told her that she would get the same thing the murder victim got if she opened her mouth since the statement constituted a voluntary extrajudicial statement as it was made several hours before the victim's body was found and showed peculiar knowledge regarding the murder.

§ 709 Distinction from admission

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

An admission is an acknowledgment by the accused of certain facts which tend, together with other facts, to establish his guilt, 10 while a confession is an acknowledgment of guilt itself. 11 An admission is something less than a confession and, unlike a confession, putting to one side the problem of corroboration, 12 an admission is not sufficient in itself to support a conviction. 13 Or as sometimes stated, while a confession is an admission of guilt by a party charged with a crime, it is a special kind of admission. 14 Furthermore, although every confession, is an admission, not every admission is a confession. 15

§ 709 ----Distinction from admission [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

In a prosecution of defendant for the murder of her husband, the trial court did not err in admitting defendant's statement, "Honey, why did you make me do it?" while she was viewing her husband's body at the funeral home, since the statement was too ambiguous to be incriminating and was an admission by a party opponent within the purview of GS § 8C- 1, Rule 801(d)(A); the statement was obviously relevant; and the admission, though prejudicial to defendant, was not unfairly so. State v Lambert (1995) 341 NC 36, 460 SE2d 123.

§ 710 Distinction from exculpatory statement

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

To give a statement the binding force of a confession, its distinctive feature must be an acknowledgement of guilt without any exculpating statement or explanation; 16 thus, a confession may be distinguished from an exculpatory statement of an accused. 17 For example, a statement that admits the commission of the act charged, but which also gives a legal justification or excuse, is not a confession. 18 However, a statement by a defendant containing an admission of facts which together constitute proof of the commission of the crime charged has been deemed to be a confession even though additional facts are asserted in the statement by way of justification of the crime, if the additional facts are insufficient as a matter of law to establish a defense. 19

§ 710 ----Distinction from exculpatory statement [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Bank teller's prior statement to FBI agent, that robber's eyes were dark, was admissible as substantive evidence; fact that it was exculpatory of defendant, who had light hazel eyes, was irrelevant, since rule's plain language does not exclude exculpatory statements. United States v Brink (1994, CA3 Pa) 39 F3d 419.

In prosecution for murder and related offenses, taped conversation between defendant and girlfriend during which defendant denied any knowledge of murder victim or her disappearance should have been admitted as exculpatory statement made close in time to defendant's confession at police station; however, error did not require reversal. § 711 Confession as judicial or extrajudicial

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

A confession may be characterized as judicial or extrajudicial. 20 A confession is judicial when made by the accused in the court trying the crime charged, and is ordinarily called a plea of guilty; 21 and a confession is extrajudicial when made by the accused out of court. 22 A confession made before a magistrate, as on a preliminary examination, at an inquest—as at a coroner's inquest or a fire inquest—before a grand jury, or at the trial of another, cannot properly be designated as a judicial confession for the reason that the requisite authority to determine finally on the conviction or acquittal of the accused for the crime charged is lacking. Hence, such a quasi-judicial confession would fall under the head of extrajudicial confessions. 23

§ 712 Proof

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

An oral confession may be proven by any person who heard it. 24 A written confession must be produced, with proof of its authorship, the same as any other form of documentary evidence. 25

In proving a confession, the prosecution is allowed to show the entire statement of the accused; and, if any part is omitted, the accused is allowed to supply it. 26 If the accused supplies an omitted exculpatory part, it is for the jury to determine the weight to be accorded to such part. 27

The testimony of a witness is not rendered inadmissible by the fact that he heard only a portion of the statement containing a confession, 28 or that he heard the entire statement but recalls only a portion thereof. 29

Admission of confessions showing the commission of another offense by the accused has been held to be error in certain instances. 30

§ 712 ----Proof [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

The trial court did not err in a murder prosecution in which defendant was convicted of being an accessory by admitting only a portion of defendant's confession where defendant offered the statement into evidence rather than the State, the judge excluded portions of the statement which he found to be immaterial and irrelevant, and defendant made no showing to the contrary. State v Barnes (1994) 116 NC App 311, 447 SE2d 478.

§ 713 Motion for suppression of confession

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

An accused may, pursuant to the applicable court rule, move for suppression of a confession prior to trial on grounds that the confession was involuntary. 31 Furthermore, in the absence of a statutory prohibition or limitation, the trial court has jurisdiction to entertain a motion to suppress a confession obtained in violation of the accused's constitutional rights, and whether the motion should be entertained before trial is a matter within the discretion of the trial court. 32

◆ Practice guide: In some jurisdictions, where a defendant intends to appeal from a suppression motion denial, he must give notice of his intention to the prosecutor and the court before plea negotiations are finalized or he will waive the appeal of right provisions of the applicable statute. 33

2. Admissibility, In General; Form of Confession [714-718]

§ 714 Generally; extrajudicial confessions, generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Extrajudicial confessions of the accused in a criminal case, if satisfactorily shown to have been made voluntarily, 34 without improper inducements, 35 and not in violation of his constitutional rights to counsel and to remain silent, 36 are generally admissible in evidence against the accused, 37 subject to pertinent constitutional requirements—such as the giving of Miranda rights and adequate representation of counsel during questioning—or the valid waiver of such rights, 38 and subject to other basic requirements, such as the requirement of corroboration and proof of the corpus delicti. 39

The admission of confessions as evidence against the accused is in a broad sense an exception to the rule which excludes hearsay testimony. But, while confessions are hearsay, they are considered reliable because the law presumes that no rational person would make admissions against his interest unless urged to do so by the promptings of his conscience to tell the truth. Thus, confessions generally have such a high degree of reliability that they can be taken out of the classification of unreliable hearsay. 40 But if such admissions are not understandingly made, are not voluntary, or are induced by fear or hope of benefit, they do not rest upon the honest and repentant conscience, and the element which raises the presumption of reliability is not present. 41

To be admissible, a confession must relate to the crime with which the accused is charged. 42 Even so, when a different crime confessed is a part of the same scheme as the crime charged, the confession would be admissible. 43

The fact that a confession was made under oath does not affect its admissibility, 44 as where the accused was a witness in a prior proceeding. 45

◆ Practice guide: While state statutes or rules of criminal procedure sometimes prohibit a jury from having a copy of any written confession by the defendant, it is generally not improper for a trial judge to permit documents or tape recordings containing confessions to be taken into the jury room in a criminal case. 46

§ 714 ----Generally; extrajudicial confessions, generally [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Exclusion on hearsay grounds of codefendant's statements that tended to exculpate defendant did not violate defendant's rights to put reliable third party confessions before jury in order to determine guilt, where statements were not reliable and were made by fellow gang members to protect defendant. Carson v Peters (1994, CA7 Ill) 42 F3d 384.

It constituted unjustifiable circumvention of rule prohibiting admission of nontestifying codefendant's confession in evidence where, during cross-examination of defendant, prosecutor repeatedly framed his questions in such way as to render it obvious to jury that source of questions was accomplice's confession. People v Manuel (1992, 2d Dept) 182 AD2d 711, 582 NYS2d 735, app den 80 NY2d 834, 587 NYS2d 919, 600 NE2d 646.

There was no error in a first- degree murder prosecution where the court did not allow defendant to present an exculpatory statement made by defendant to an officer where defendant contended that the State opened the door when it introduced defendant's earlier remarks into evidence. Although it has been held that if the State submits parts of a defendant's confession the defendant must be allowed to present other parts of the statement even though they are self-serving, defendant's remarks here constituted two verbal transactions. The first remarks took place while defendant was being processed and fingerprinted, were unsolicited, and the conversation was terminated by the officer. The second remarks were made after a period of time had elapsed, after defendant had left one room and entered another, and after defendant had been given Miranda warnings and interrogation had begun. State v Vick (1995) 341 NC 569, 461 SE2d 655.

There was no error in a first- degree murder prosecution where the court did not allow defendant to present an exculpatory self- serving statement made by defendant because the State opened the door by asking the officer about earlier remarks. The State does not open the door for the introduction of another statement made later in the day by simply introducing an earlier statement by a defendant; a party is only entitled to introduce evidence that would have been inadmissible if offered initially where the other party introduces evidence as to a particular fact that is covered by the subsequent statement. State v Vick (1995) 341 NC 569, 461 SE2d 655.

§ 715 Judicial confessions, generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

A judicial confession which has been voluntarily made is generally admissible in evidence, whether the confession takes the form of a plea of guilty 47 —including a plea of guilty at a preliminary hearing before a committing magistrate 48 —or is found in other statements made in court in the course of legal proceedings, 49 including statements made before a grand jury 50 or a justice of peace. 51 A plea of guilty is properly admissible in evidence as a confession even though it is entered in a case other than the one at trial, where the crime charged to which the defendant pleaded guilty was substantially the same crime charged in the present indictment. 52 On the other hand, while there have been some exceptions, a plea of nolo contendere generally has no effect beyond a particular case, and cannot be used against the defendant as an admission of guilt in any other criminal case. 53

While there is authority to the effect that an offer to plead guilty to a lesser degree of a crime, or to compromise on punishment, is admissible in evidence, 54 in some jurisdictions, any communication relating to the plea bargaining process is privileged and inadmissible in evidence unless the accused has subsequently entered a plea of guilty which has not been withdrawn. 55 Furthermore, a withdrawn plea of guilty is generally not admissible, 56 and in some instances, statutes proscribing the admission in evidence of a withdrawn plea of guilty have been applied to make inadmissible an offer by an accused to plead guilty to a less serious offense. 57

§ 716 Oral and written confessions

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

A confession may be oral or written, or partly oral and partly written. 58 A written confession has greater evidentiary value than an oral one in the sense that a jury will tend to regard it as more reliable. 59

Absent a dispute as to the accuracy of a written confession, it does not matter whether it was written by the defendant or by a third person. 60

A written confession is not objectionable because: it fails to include the questions asked; 61 it is not dated; 62 it is in question and answer form; 63 the word "we" is frequently used, in the case of an individual confession; 64 it was prepared by another and adopted by the confessor by signature 65 or by an admission as to its correctness; 66 it was revised and edited before being signed; 67 it is of the same tenor as an earlier oral confession; 68 or it constitutes material evidence in another case growing out of the same transaction. 69

A written confession need not constitute a literal transcription of what the defendant said; the substance of what he said is sufficient. 70 Nor is it necessary that the written confession contain all that the confessor said. 71

§ 716 ----Oral and written confessions [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Confessions are statements against the declarant's interest, which are permitted into evidence after a determination that they have been freely and voluntarily given. Young v State (1994, Fla) 645 So 2d 965, 19 FLW S 531.

Counsel may argue to a jury and to a judge as factfinder that the failure of the police to electronically record statements made in a place of custody should be considered in deciding the voluntariness of any statement, whether the defendant was properly advised of his rights, and whether any statement attributed to the defendant was made. Commonwealth v Diaz, 422 Mass 269, 661 NE2d 1326.

The court would decline to adopt or prescribe a rule of general superintendence or of common law suppressing statements taken from a defendant in custody in a police station unless those statements have been electronically recorded. Commonwealth v Diaz, 422 Mass 269, 661 NE2d 1326.

Court erred in permitting defendant's written and videotaped confessions, which contained references to prior uncharged crimes, to be submitted for jury's consideration in their entirety, even though statements were descriptive of what could be considered one- night crime spree, where portions of statements which recited events that ultimately culminated in shooting were not so inextricably interwoven with description of shooting as to be admissible on that basis. People v Jones (1992, 2d Dept) 182 AD2d 708, 582 NYS2d 476, app den 80 NY2d 905, 588 NYS2d 830, 602 NE2d 238.

It is not necessary that the statement of an accused be in his own handwriting or that the person taking the statement repeat the exact words of the accused; but a summary statement of an accused reduced to writing by another person is admissible against the accused where it was voluntarily made and was read to or by the accused, and signed or otherwise adopted by him as correct. Therefore, an officer's written summarization of defendant's statement to him was admissible where defendant adopted the statement as his own by reading it, circling a minor incorrect portion, and initialing it. State v Boykin, 298 NC 687, 259 SE2d 883, cert den 446 US 911, 64 L Ed 2d 264, 100 S Ct 1841.

A written confession which corroborates most of what the officers as witnesses said that defendant orally stated to them is admissible even though they had already given in their testimony their complete statement of the defendant's confession. State v Adams, 339 Mo 926, 98 SW2d 632, 100 ALR 838.

A written confession, each page of which was signed by the defendant, is not rendered inadmissible by the defendant's testimony, and the concession of the officers, that the writing did not reflect the defendant's dictation verbatim, the officers having testified that the writing fairly represented what he said, and that it was read to him and by him after it was written, and the defendant admitted that he "glanced over it" before the pages were signed. State v Adams, 339 Mo 926, 98 SW2d 632, 100 ALR 838.

§ 717 --Unsigned confessions

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

A written confession is generally not rendered inadmissible by the fact that it was not signed, if it is otherwise proved to have been made by the accused. 72 In this regard, the fact that a page of the confession was not signed, through mere inadvertence, does not affect the admissibility of the entire confession. 73 Furthermore, a defendant's voluntary statement to the police was admissible, where police reduced the defendant's statement to writing and the defendant initialed each answer, even though he refused to sign the statement. 74

A confession which was made orally and put in written form by a stenographer may be admitted in evidence, even though not signed by the accused, where the accused acknowledges that it is correct, 75 or where the stenographer testifies that it is accurate. 76 However, a defendant's purported confession, handwritten by a police officer who questioned the defendant, is not admissible when it was never signed or orally acknowledged by defendant. 77 In addition, where an oral confession is taken down stenographically and then transcribed, but the transcript is neither shown nor read to the accused, it is not admissible in evidence. 78

Transcripts of tape-recorded confessions 79 have been deemed admissible even though unsigned, where the original tape-recording has been lost, 80 and the police officer who asked questions of the defendant and heard his answers has testified that he read the transcript and that it was an accurate record of the conversation. 81

§ 718 --Confessions recorded by electronic means

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

A sound recording ⁸² or a sound motion picture ⁸³ of a confession is admissible if properly identified and authenticated. A videotaped confession may also be admitted under proper circumstances. ⁸⁴

Under certain circumstances, transcripts of tape-recorded confessions may also be admitted where, for example, the original tape has been lost, and this is so even though the transcript has not been signed by the accused. ⁸⁵

◆ Observation: Use of videotape to record an accused's statement has been praised as a modern technique to protect a defendant's rights, which, to the extent possible, should be used to preserve all statements of defendants; such technique protects the accused in that if he is hesitant, uncertain or faltering, such facts will appear, and if he has been worn out by interrogation, physically abused, or in other respects is acting involuntarily, ⁸⁶ the tape will corroborate him in ways a typewritten statement would not. ⁸⁷

In prosecution for robbery of liquor store, trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting into evidence tape recorded confession by defendant, even though portion of tape recording referred to defendant's attempt to rob another liquor store, where defendant's identification as robber was in issue and where similarities of two crimes and common participation by defendant and his accomplice established required relevancy on issue of identity. State v Treadwell, 223 Kan 577, 575 P2d 550.

3. Voluntariness [719-748]

a. Requirement, In General [719-727]

§ 719 Generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Due process requires that a confession be voluntarily made; 88 confessions are admissible as evidence when they are voluntarily given, 89 not as a result of threats, 90 promises, 91 violence, 92 or other improper inducements or influences. 93

Coercive police activity is a necessary predicate to the finding that a confession is not voluntary within the meaning of the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. 94

The test for determining whether a confession is voluntary is whether the defendant's will was overborne at the time he confessed; 95 or, as stated by the United States Supreme Court, if an individual's will was overborne or if his confession was not the product of a rational intellect and a free will, his confession is inadmissible because coerced. 96 Any questioning by a police officer which in fact produces a confession which is not the product of a free intellect renders that confession inadmissible. 97

◆ Observation: The test of voluntariness is not a "but-for" test. The question is not whether the confession would have been made in the absence of the interrogation. Few criminals are impelled to confess to the police purely of their own accord, without any questioning at all. Thus, it can almost always be said that the interrogation caused the confession. 98

Resolving the issue of a confession's voluntariness requires an independent examination of the entire record and a consideration of the totality of the circumstances. 99

Notwithstanding the totality of the circumstances test, it has been recognized that a confession which is the product of violence or the threat of violence is per se involuntary. 1 Nevertheless, psychological coercion does not render a confession per se involuntary, so that, in such circumstances, the totality of the circumstances test does apply. 2

§ 719 ----Generally [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

For purposes of the rule that a confession obtained during a period of detention by state or local officers must be suppressed if an accused can demonstrate the existence of improper collaboration between federal officers and the state or local officers, the action of a local sheriff's department in informing agents of the United States Secret Service that counterfeit currency had been found in an accused's possession is routine cooperation between local and federal authorities which by itself is wholly unobjectionable. United States v Alvarez- Sanchez (US) 128 L Ed 2d 319, 114 S Ct 1599.

Trial court did not err in admitting evidence of defendant's spontaneous confession when officers arrived to execute arrest warrant and initially mistook his brother for defendant; damage done to defense is not basis for exclusion, rather question is one of unfair prejudice, not prejudice alone. United States v Munoz (1994, CA1 Mass) 36 F3d 1229.

Incriminating statements made by defendant to police, in police van, in connection with investigation of accident were not result of custodial interrogation where defendant had not been told that he could not leave interview, police officers made no threats or promises, and it was standard procedure to have people involved in accident sit in police van and explain how accident occurred. People v Fury (1993, Colo App) 872 P2d 1280, reh den (Nov 4, 1993) and cert den (Colo) 1994 Colo LEXIS 450.

In prosecution for malice murder in which it was established that defendant, a mentally retarded 19- year- old, had killed her one-year-old child by means of repeated blows to his head with metal table leg, trial court properly determined that defendant's confession was voluntary where officers who received defendant's statements testified that she was informed of her rights and appeared to understand them, that she never asked for counsel, that she volunteered to write out written statement and did so, that she was given opportunity to take break and make telephone call, and that her statements were made voluntarily. Though defendant was mentally retarded, it was not necessary to apply factors used for scrutinizing statements of juveniles. Brown v State (1993) 262 Ga 833, 426 SE2d 559, 92 Fulton County D R 976.

Suspect in suffocation death of infant was not in custody when he confessed to placing his hand over child's mouth, where suspect had agreed to allow investigating officer to photograph home, and had broken down and admitted killing without pointed questioning, notwithstanding that suspect subjectively feared that he was under arrest due to marijuana plants found growing at home, where officer assured suspect that marijuana matter would be taken up after funeral and would not result in immediate arrest. Moses v State (1994) 264 Ga 313, 444 SE2d 767, 94 Fulton County D R 2245.

State's failure to produce tape recording of preliminary hearing in response to defendant's requests for production did not require trial court to exclude recording under statute relating to disclosure of statements given "while in police custody." Person testifying before magistrate or other judicial officer in open court at preliminary hearing is not in "police custody" within contemplation of statute, but even if defendant's detention constituted police custody, tape recording of preliminary hearing contained no statement that was inculpatory or incriminating on its face; it became so only as result of his testimony at trial and was admitted for limited purpose of impeachment. Maddox v State (1993) 210 Ga App 526, 436 SE2d 730, 93 Fulton County D R 3761.

Voluntariness of defendant's confession may be attacked when state makes threats against family of accused, even when threats may be enforced. In order to prevail upon such challenge, however, defendant must present evidence of direct threats made by police. Mere explanations of possible consequences of defendant's spouse being charged, or contradictory evidence as to whether threats were made is insufficient to vitiate voluntariness of confession, absent proof that threats were made directly to defendant. Cain v State (1992, Ind App) 594 NE2d 835, on reh, remanded (Ind App) 599 NE2d 625.

Questioning by crisis-intervention officer of distraught subject who held rifle to his head and threatened suicide was not custodial interrogation, where officer, who had 20 years' experience in handling delicate situations, talked to subject about variety of things, gained his confidence, and disarmed him, and where officer did not know that body of subject's girlfriend had been discovered in nearby room at time subject confessed to shooting girlfriend. State v Reimann (1994) 19 Kan App 2d 431, 870 P2d 1346.

A statement made by the defendant would not be suppressed where (1) when the defendant was arrested, he was given Miranda warnings and signed an incriminating statement, (2) on the next day, the police decided to take his fingerprints and palmprints, (3) while an officer was taking the prints, the defendant blurted out "this is really going to fuck me up," (4) the officer asked "why," (5) the defendant said that he had handled one of the guns used in the murder at issue but that it had jammed, and (6) the officer stopped the defendant from saying anything further; the defendant's first statement was spontaneous, the officer's one word reply seemed to be a natural reflex and the defendant's second statement was volunteered and was not the product of improper probing questioning. Commonwealth v Diaz, 422 Mass 269, 661 NE2d 1326.

Police officer's asking generalized question of defendant, who was incarcerated for another offense, and defendant's cellmate, "Who does all this stuff belong to?", after officer discovered weapons in their cell was not custodial interrogation, since there was no lengthy interrogation, no unwary suspect, and no psychological coercion. State v Baker (1993, Mo App) 850 SW2d 944.

Defendant in murder prosecution was not in custody at any point during interview (in course of which defendant confessed) where defendant (1) had requested interview and drove himself to police station, (2) was not physically restrained in any way during interview, and he enjoyed freedom of movement throughout police station, and (3) was allowed to go home, without restriction, after interview. State v Carroll (1994, NH) 645 A2d 82.

Huntley ruling in murder prosecution achieved requisite finality on defendant's conviction, and thus lack of finality was no bar to People's assertion, in second murder prosecution, that defendant was collaterally estopped to relitigate issue of voluntariness of confession obtained during combined interrogation with regard to both murders. People v Aguilera (1993) 82 NY2d 23, 603 NYS2d 392, 623 NE2d 519.

The trial court did not err in a first-degree murder prosecution by denying defendant's motion to suppress his statements to officers where the evidence shows that the defendant agreed to talk with law enforcement officers, including going to the Sheriff's Department on several occasions and agreeing to go to Asheville for a polygraph examination; defendant was repeatedly told he was not under arrest and was free to leave at any time; defendant was not handcuffed, nor was his freedom restrained; defendant indicated that he wanted to leave on several occasions and was allowed to leave or was taken home by law enforcement officers; defendant testified that the officers had left his apartment on one occasion when he had asked; and defendant also acknowledged that from prior experience he knew what his rights were and that he had knowingly waived them. Miranda warnings were not required, the trial court's findings support the conclusion that there were "no promises of reward or inducements" nor "threat or suggested threat of violence to persuade or induce the defendant to make the statement," and there is also substantial evidence to support the finding that defendant's mother voluntarily came to Graham County and that she was not acting as an agent of the State. State v Rose (1994) 335 NC 301, 439 SE2d 518.

There was ample evidence to support the trial court's findings of fact, and those findings support the court's conclusion that defendant voluntarily waived his juvenile and Miranda rights and that the statement that he gave thereafter to the police was freely, voluntarily, and understandingly given. State v Reid (1994) 335 NC 647, 440 SE2d 776.

The Supreme Court declined to reconsider its prior ruling upholding the admission of a second confession following a coerced confession in light of Arizona v Fulminante (1991) 499 US 279, 113 L Ed 2d 302, 111 S Ct 1246, 91 CDOS 2209, 91 Daily Journal DAR 3530, reh den 500 US 938, 114 L Ed 2d 472, 111 S Ct 2067. State v Jones (1994) 336 NC 229, 443 SE2d 48.

The trial court did not err in the denial of a juvenile defendant's motion to suppress an inculpatory statement he made to police officers where the trial court found from uncontroverted evidence that defendant was fully advised of his Miranda rights and his rights under G.S. § 7A-595(a), and the court also found that defendant "freely, knowingly, intelligently and voluntarily" waived his rights and that his statement was made "freely, voluntarily and understandingly." The trial court's findings were not insufficient to support the ruling admitting defendant's confession into evidence because they did not include the precise words of G.S. § 7A- 595(d) that defendant "knowingly, willingly, and understandingly" waived his rights. State v Gibson (1995) 342 NC 142, 463 SE2d 193.

Although a defendant in a first- degree murder prosecution contended that the totality of circumstances surrounding his statement, the presence of psychological coercion, and his condition show that his statement should not have been admitted, the court found based on substantial evidence that no threats or promises induced defendant to make his statement, that defendant was not under the influence of alcohol, was not in need of medical attention, and did not request food or beverage, and these findings are based on substantial evidence and are binding. State v Bowie (1995) 340 NC 199, 456 SE2d 771.

The trial court in a prosecution in which defendant was convicted of being an accessory to murder correctly concluded that defendant's incriminating statement to officers was made voluntarily where she was never taken into custody or deprived of her freedom; she was not under arrest; officers had told her that she was free to leave at any time and that they were interviewing her as a witness; defendant went to the bathroom unescorted, indicating that she could have left the sheriff's office had she wanted to do so; after the interview, the officers told her that they wanted to talk to her again; although she later spoke to an attorney who advised her not to talk to the officers, she nevertheless drove to the sheriff's office by herself and spoke to the officers; at the conclusion of this interview, defendant left the sheriff's department unescorted; during neither interview did defendant, who has completed a couple of years of college, request an attorney or indicate that she did not want to talk to the officers; and there is no evidence that the officers made promises to defendant or coerced her in any way. State v Barnes (1994) 116 NC App 311, 447 SE2d 478.

Police officer's questioning defendant in interview room at police station was not custodial interrogation, where defendant had voluntarily gone to station and was eager to help police solve crime of which defendant was subsequently convicted. Commonwealth v Foster (1993) 425 Pa Super 61, 624 A2d 144.

Questioning of defendant in jail by pretrial services investigator was not custodial interrogation, since investigator was ascertaining only routine information required to process defendant's arrest. Cruse v State (1994, Tex App Houston (14th Dist)) 882 SW2d 50.

Requirement that defendant, who was incarcerated in county jail, fill out form "Request To Use Law Library" in order to be admitted to jail's law library did not amount to custodial interrogation, although form asked for "reasons" why defendant needed to use library, since there was no interrogation of defendant. Watson v State (1994, Tex App Fort Worth) 885 SW2d 222.

If the confession is involuntary, it is excluded not because it is unlikely to be true, but because the method used to obtain it offends the principle that ours is an accusatorial and not an inquisitorial system—a system in which the state must establish guilt by evidence independently and freely secured and may not by its own coercion prove its charge against an accused out of his own mouth. Applying the totality of the circumstances test, it was concluded that the defendant's will was overborne in such a way as to render his confession the product of coercion, where (1) the defendant, because he was an alleged child murder, was in danger of physical harm at the hands of other inmates; (2) a government agent was aware that the defendant had been receiving rough treatment from such inmates; (3) using his knowledge of these threats, the government informant offered to protect the defendant in exchange for a confession to the child murder; and (4) in response to the government agent's offer of protection, the defendant confessed. Arizona v Fulminante, 499 US 279, 113 L Ed 2d 302, 111 S Ct 1246, 91 CDOS 2209, 91 Daily Journal DAR 3530, reh den (US) 114 L Ed 2d 472, 111 S Ct 2067.

§ 720 Requirement under federal statute

Pursuant to federal statute, in any criminal prosecution brought by the United States or by the District of Columbia, a confession shall be admissible in evidence if it is voluntarily given. 3 In federal prosecutions, the trial judge, in determining the issue of voluntariness, shall take into consideration all the circumstances surrounding the giving of the confession. 4

The alleged falsity of certain statements in a confession goes to the question of credibility and is not pertinent to the question of voluntariness, which is the sole test for admissibility under 18 USCS § 3501. 5

§ 720 ----Requirement under federal statute [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Defendant's confession was voluntary, as required by 18 USCS § 3501(a), where defendant incriminated himself approximately 10 hours after his arrest, which was not appreciably longer than six-hour "safe harbor" and was quite reasonable given fact that defendant was arrested in wee hours of Saturday morning. United States v Pugh (1994, CA8 Iowa) 25 F3d 669.

§ 721 --Relation to Bruton rule and Miranda doctrine

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Although 18 USCS § 3501(a) states that a confession shall be admissible in evidence if it is voluntarily given,⁶ there are situations, involving the Bruton rule⁷ and the Miranda doctrine,⁸ in which an otherwise voluntary confession may still be inadmissible as a matter of constitutional law. A witness protected by the privilege against self-incrimination may rightfully refuse to answer unless and until he is protected at least against the use of his compelled answers and evidence derived therefrom in any subsequent criminal case in which he is a defendant, and absent such protection, if he is nevertheless compelled to answer, his answers are inadmissible against him in a later criminal prosecution.⁹

Separate from the issue of voluntariness recognized under 18 USCS § 3501 is the application of the Miranda doctrine excluding all confessions made by suspects undergoing custodial interrogation who have not received the Miranda warnings before making such a confession. Confessions may be excludible under the Miranda doctrine even though the statements might not be considered involuntary in traditional terms.¹⁰ Accordingly, it has been held that the statute is concerned only with the reliability of a confession as voluntarily given, and not with the extrinsic policy considerations of protecting the accused's constitutional rights and deterring future lawlessness by law enforcement personnel through the Miranda doctrine.¹¹ The Miranda decision advised that Congress was free to develop its own safeguards for the privilege against self-incrimination during custodial interrogation, so long as such safeguards were fully as effective as those described in the Miranda doctrine for informing accused persons of their right of silence and in affording a continuous opportunity to exercise it; where rights secured by the Constitution are involved, there can be no rulemaking or legislation which would abrogate them.¹²

The Miranda doctrine is viewed as more strict than the statute in its application; any statements held to be voluntary and admissible under the Miranda doctrine are automatically voluntary and admissible under 18 USCS § 3501.¹³

Statements elicited in noncompliance with the Miranda rule—requiring warnings, prior to custodial interrogation, as to the right to counsel and as to the privilege against self-incrimination—may not be admitted for certain purposes in a criminal trial. Stansbury v California (US) 128 L Ed 2d 293, 114 S Ct 1526.

Assuming that there has been no break in the custody of the accused subsequent to the accused's assertion of the right to the assistance of counsel during custodial interrogation, if the police initiate an encounter with the accused in the absence of counsel subsequent to the accused's assertion of the right, the accused's statements made during the encounter are presumed involuntary and therefore inadmissible as substantive evidence at trial, even where the accused's statements would be considered voluntary under traditional standards. McNeil v Wisconsin, 501 US 171, 115 L Ed 2d 158, 111 S Ct 2204, 91 CDOS 4435, 91 Daily Journal DAR 6953.

§ 722 --When confession does not result from custodial interrogation

--

Nothing in the federal statute pertaining to admissibility of confessions in criminal prosecutions brought by the United States or by the District of Columbia 14 bars the admission in evidence of any confession made or given voluntarily by any person to any other person without interrogation by anyone, or at any time at which the person who made or gave such confession was not under arrest or other detention. 15 Thus, if a suspect approaches a police officer and, without any prompting, confesses to a crime, the confession is not inadmissible in the absence of any coercive police activity. 16

Accordingly, an informal statement volunteered by the accused to his cellmate, 17 or to a private person working undercover for the government 18 does not trigger the procedures mandated by 18 USCS § 3501, and no voluntariness hearing is required under the statute. 19 Moreover, the statute does not bar the admission of a confession not made under interrogation 20 –that is, spontaneous statements. 21 The accused is not under detention, and thus the statute is not applicable, when the accused makes incriminating statements while talking over the telephone to a federal agent. 22

The statute is consistent with the Miranda doctrine insofar as it does not apply to situations not involving interrogation 23 or at any time when the accused is not under arrest or otherwise in custody. 24 But the statute does not compromise the constitutional doctrine that surreptitious interrogations which elicit incriminating statements without the knowledge of the accused constitute a violation of the Sixth amendment right to counsel rendering the statements inadmissible. 25

§ 722 --When confession does not result from custodial interrogation [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

There was no prejudicial error in a first-degree murder prosecution where defendant alleged that he was improperly questioned after invoking his right to counsel and the trial court concluded that the statement made by defendant was spontaneous but did not make a specific finding as to who reinitiated conversation. Assuming that it was error for defendant's statements to have been admitted without an exact finding as to who reinitiated conversation, any error was harmless in light of his other statements, eyewitness testimony, and other corroborating testimony. State v Walls (1995) 342 NC 1, 463 SE2d 738.

§ 723 Raising and determining voluntariness; hearing requirement

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

A defendant who claims a confession given by him was involuntary may move to suppress it. 26 If the motion alleges facts which, if true, show the involuntariness of the confession, the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment 27 requires that the trial judge conduct a hearing and independently resolve the issue. 28 A defendant objecting to the admission of a confession is entitled to a fair hearing in which both the underlying factual issues and the voluntariness of his confession are actually and reliably determined. 29 This determination requires facing the voluntariness issue squarely, in illuminating isolation and unbecloved by other issues and the effect of extraneous but prejudicial evidence. 30 If the trial judge finds the confession involuntary, the confession is rejected and never comes to the attention of the jury. It is only if the trial judge finds the confession voluntary that it may be considered by the jury.

◆ Comment: Where the facts are in dispute, and a state court fails, either at the time of trial or in a collateral proceeding, to hold a full and fair evidentiary hearing concerning the voluntariness of a confession, a federal habeas court 32 must hold an evidentiary hearing. A federal evidentiary hearing is required unless the state-court trier of fact has, after a full hearing, found the relevant facts. 33

Although the judge need not make formal findings of fact or write an opinion, his conclusion that the confession was voluntary must appear from the record with unmistakable clarity. 34

The separate hearing requirement of Jackson v Denno has no applicability in a bench trial setting, whether in state or federal court. 35

◆ Observation: Jackson v Denno was premised largely on the premise that lay jurors were unable to separate considerations going solely to the voluntariness of a confession from matters affecting its reliability as proof of the defendant's guilt or innocence. However, a trial judge, unlike a juror, is trained by learning and experience to segregate evidence bearing on a confession's voluntariness from evidence bearing on its reliability and the defendant's culpability. 36

It has been recognized that the Constitution does not require a voluntariness hearing absent some contemporaneous challenge to use of the confession voiced at trial, 37 that a trial court is not required, sua sponte, to provide a hearing on the voluntariness of a confession, 38 and that a trial court is not required to conduct a voluntariness hearing where defendant never challenged the voluntariness of his alleged confession. 39 However, it has also been determined that a trial judge has the responsibility, independent of a request by the defense counsel or the prosecutor, to immediately order voir dire on the voluntariness of a confession where the testimony disclosed that defendant had confessed to the police only after having been beaten. 40

◆ Practice guide: The defendant's testifying at the voluntariness hearing does not preclude him from refusing to testify at the trial proper. 41

Under the so-called "orthodox rule," the decision of the trial judge is final. Thus, if the trial judge finds the confession voluntary, this finding is binding upon the jury, in which case the jury may determine only whether the confession is truthful. 42 The decision in Jackson v Denno neither raised any question about the constitutional validity of the so-called orthodox rule for judging the admissibility of confessions nor even suggested that the Constitution requires submission of voluntariness claims to a jury as well as a judge. 43

Under the so-called "Massachusetts rule," the decision of the trial judge is not binding upon the jury. Thus, if the trial judge finds the confession voluntary, the jury is allowed to disagree and to ignore the confession. 44 Given the integrity of the preliminary proceedings before the judge, the Massachusetts procedure does not pose hazards to the rights of a defendant. 45

◆ Observation: The "orthodox" and "Massachusetts" rules are the same in requiring the trial judge independently to resolve the issue of voluntariness, and in allowing the confession to be submitted to the jury only if the trial judge finds the confession voluntary. The rules differ only with respect to the jury's role. Under the "orthodox rule," the jury may consider only the confession's truthfulness; while under the "Massachusetts rule," the jury may consider the confession's voluntariness as well as its truthfulness.

The United States Supreme Court has never squarely decided whether the voluntariness hearing must be conducted outside the presence of the jury. 46 However, under the applicable federal statute, voluntariness must be determined out of the presence of the jury. 47 Furthermore, some states have determined that the voluntariness hearing must be held outside of the presence of the jury. 48 But in some jurisdictions while a defendant is entitled to a hearing outside the presence of the jury to determine the voluntariness of his statements, he waives that right by failing to make a timely request. 49

§ 723 ----Raising and determining voluntariness; hearing requirement [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

There was no claim of coercion, defendant was advised at outset of interview that he was not under arrest, and throughout interview defendant continued his domestic activities, including watching television and preparing a meal. State v Evans (1993, Iowa) 495 NW2d 760.

At suppression hearing, defendant testified that his confession was coerced by threats and promises by police officer. Officer did not testify and State's witness did not controvert defendant's testimony, although confession did contain form recitals that it was given freely and voluntarily. Held, because defendant's allegations were not controverted, confession should have been suppressed. Robinson v State (1993, Tex App Houston (14th Dist)) 855 SW2d 107.

Determination of whether, considering countervailing evidence, defendant has knowingly and intelligently waived his Miranda rights should be made with regard for totality of circumstances. State v Lee (1993, App) 175 Wis 2d 348, 499 NW2d 250.

Where defendant filed motion to suppress statement that defendant claimed was not voluntary because of defendant's limited mental capacity, trial court was to determine whether state had shown by greater weight of credible evidence whether, considering totality of circumstances, defendant possessed awareness of state's intention to use statements to secure conviction and of defendant's right to stand mute and request lawyer such that defendant could validly weigh his Miranda rights. State v Lee (1993, App) 175 Wis 2d 348, 499 NW2d 250.

Although the trial judge ruled that defendant's confession was voluntary and hence admissible, he erred in precluding the defendant from introducing testimony about the physical and psychological environment in which the confession was obtained, since this kind of evidence is often highly relevant to its reliability and credibility. It was noted that the requirement that the court make a pretrial voluntariness determination does not undercut the defendant's traditional prerogative to challenge the confession's reliability during the course of the trial. Crane v Kentucky, 476 US 683, 90 L Ed 2d 636, 106 S Ct 2142, 20 Fed Rules Evid Serv 801, on remand (Ky) 726 SW2d 302, cert den 484 US 834, 98 L Ed 2d 70, 108 S Ct 111, habeas corpus granted (WD Ky) 708 F Supp 163, affd (CA6 Ky) 889 F2d 715, cert den 493 US 1094, 107 L Ed 2d 1070, 110 S Ct 1168, appeal after remand (Ky) 833 SW2d 813, cert den (US) 122 L Ed 2d 167, 113 S Ct 1020.

Even if there was a flaw in the state trial court's procedure which resulted in a determination that the challenged confession was voluntary, Jackson v Denno was satisfied because the state court, in connection with defendant's second motion to vacate his sentence, unquestionably furnished a procedurally adequate evidentiary hearing. Moreover, it seemed that the finding of voluntariness was overwhelmingly supported. Swenson v Stidham, 409 US 224, 34 L Ed 2d 431, 93 S Ct 359, and on other grounds 410 US 904, 35 L Ed 2d 266, 93 S Ct 955 and on remand (CA8 Mo) 506 F2d 478, cert den 429 US 941, 50 L Ed 2d 311, 97 S Ct 358.

The rule of Jackson v Denno, that a jury is not to hear a confession until the trial judge has determined that it was freely and voluntarily given, is a constitutional rule binding upon the states and, under the Supremacy Clause of Article VI of the Constitution, it must be obeyed. Sims v Georgia, 385 US 538, 17 L Ed 2d 593, 87 S Ct 639.

◆ Comment: In prescribing this procedure, Jackson v Denno struck down the so-called "New York rule," and overruled Stein v New York, 346 US 156, 97 L Ed 1522, 73 S Ct 1077, reh den 346 US 842, 98 L Ed 362, 74 S Ct 13. Under the discredited "New York rule," the trial judge was permitted to exclude a confession only if in no circumstances could the confession be deemed voluntary. If a question of fact was presented, the confession would be submitted to the jury and it would determine the confession's voluntariness as well as its truthfulness.

The procedure for the determination of the admissibility of a confession requires that the preliminary inquiry into the voluntary nature of the confession is for the trial court. Only the question of the credibility of a confession is submitted to the jury. A defendant is not entitled to relitigate the issue of voluntariness before the jury after the trial court has determined its admissibility. People v Melock, 149 Ill 2d 423, 174 Ill Dec 857, 599 NE2d 941, reh den (Oct 5, 1992).

§ 724 --Procedures in federal court

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Under federal statute, before a confession is received in evidence, the trial judge must, out of the presence of the jury, determine any issue as to voluntariness. 50 A federal trial court which determines the competency and admissibility of a confession in the presence of the jury does so at the risk of committing reversible error. 51 If the trial judge determines that the confession was voluntarily made, it will be admitted in evidence and the trial judge must permit the jury to hear relevant evidence on the issue of voluntariness, and must instruct the jury to give such weight to the confession as the jury feels it deserves under all the circumstances. 52 The requirement that a federal court make a pretrial determination of the voluntariness of the accused's confession does not undercut the accused's traditional prerogative to challenge the confession's reliability during the course of the trial, since questions of credibility are for the jury. Moreover, the defendant is entitled to have the jury consider evidence concerning the circumstances surrounding the confession, even if the defendant denies making any incriminating statements. 53

A hearing must be held if the voluntariness issue is raised. 54 The federal circuits are not all in accord regarding whether the statutory requirement of a hearing is waived if the defense makes no request for a hearing on the issue of voluntariness, or at least an objection to the admission into evidence of an incriminating statement or confession. Many circuits hold that a waiver occurs under these circumstances, 55 although there is authority that a court should hold a voluntariness hearing on its own motion once the issue of voluntariness is clearly raised by the evidence. 56

◆ Caution: The fact that full Miranda warnings are given prior to a confession does not obviate the necessity of holding a voluntariness hearing pursuant to 18 USCS § 3501 if the issue of voluntariness is raised. 57

If a voluntariness hearing is required, the hearing must afford the accused an opportunity to testify regarding the inculpatory statement out of the jury's presence without prejudice to the accused's right not to take the stand at trial. 58 The hearing may be held even after the motion to suppress has been withdrawn. 59 Although the hearing should be held before admitting the confession in evidence, 60 a hearing after admitting the confession may cure the error in not conducting it in advance. 61

§ 725 Burden and standard of proof

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

The prosecution has the burden of proving the voluntariness of a confession by a preponderance of the evidence 62 or, in some jurisdictions, beyond a reasonable doubt. 63

◆ Observation: Although it has been held that the prosecution must prove at least by a preponderance of the evidence that a confession was voluntary, 64 it has been noted that states are free, pursuant to their own law, to adopt a higher standard. 65

§ 725 ----Burden and standard of proof [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Before a defendant's inculpatory statement can be admitted for impeachment purposes, the state must show, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the statement was voluntarily made, and the voluntariness of the statement is determined by examining the totality of the circumstances surrounding the statement, including whether or not the defendant was read his rights. Willacy v State (1994, Fla) 640 So 2d 1079, 19 FLW S 258.

Whenever state bears burden of proof in motion to suppress statement that defendant claims was obtained in violation of Miranda, state must show only by greater weight of credible evidence that defendant's waiver was knowing and intelligent. State v Lee (1993, App) 175 Wis 2d 348, 499 NW2d 250.

Whenever state bears burden of proof in motion to suppress statement that defendant claims was obtained in violation of Miranda, state need prove waiver only by preponderance of evidence. State v Lee (1993, App) 175 Wis 2d 348, 499 NW2d 250.

When seeking admission of statements made during custodial questioning, separate showings which state must make are that defendant was informed of his Miranda rights, understood them and intelligently waived them and also that defendant's statement was voluntary. State v Lee (1993, App) 175 Wis 2d 348, 499 NW2d 250.

State met prima facie burdens for establishing admissibility of confession as, where police read defendant his Miranda rights and defendant indicated that he understood rights and was willing to make statement, state proved prima facie case that defendant voluntarily waived Miranda rights and, by showing that statement offered was made by defendant and was not result of duress, threats, coercion or promises, state proved prima facie case that defendant's statements were voluntary. State v Lee (1993, App) 175 Wis 2d 348, 499 NW2d 250.

Even where evidence shows that there was no police coercion, law requires particular showing of knowing and intelligence in order for valid Miranda waiver to take place. State v Lee (1993, App) 175 Wis 2d 348, 499 NW2d 250.

When determining whether waiver of Miranda rights was knowing and intelligent, trial court is to apply objective standard under which validity of any Miranda waiver must be determined by court's inspection of particular circumstances involved, including education, experience and conduct of accused as well as credibility of police officers' testimony. State v Lee (1993, App) 175 Wis 2d 348, 499 NW2d 250.

In applying objective test to determine whether defendant's waiver of Miranda rights was knowing and intelligent, trial court should be mindful of federal constitutional distinction between two types of awareness under which first type of awareness involves knowing and understanding every possible consequence of waiver of First Amendment privilege which is not mental state necessary for valid Miranda waiver while second type of awareness which involves being cognizant at all times of state's intention to use statements to secure conviction and of fact that one can stand mute and request lawyer which is mental state necessary for valid Miranda waiver. State v Lee (1993, App) 175 Wis 2d 348, 499 NW2d 250.

To justify finding of involuntariness of confession, there must be some affirmative evidence of improper police procedures deliberately used to procure confession. State v Schambow (1993, App) 176 Wis 2d 286, 500 NW2d 362.

§ 726 Standard of review of voluntariness determination

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Although great deference is normally given to the factual findings of a state court, the ultimate issue of voluntariness is a legal question requiring independent federal determination. 66

Whether a confession was voluntary is a question of law, and as such is subject to de novo review. 67

Although the ultimate issue of voluntariness is a legal question reviewable de novo, the trial court's rulings regarding subsidiary factual questions, such as whether the police intimidated or threatened a suspect 68 or whether the suspect was particularly susceptible to police coercion, are subject to review under the clearly erroneous standard. 69

It has been held that while a state court's finding that a confession was voluntary was a legal finding subject to de novo review by the district court in a habeas corpus proceeding, the state court's subsidiary factual findings are entitled to a presumption of correctness. 70

A trial court's factual determination, based on the totality of the circumstances, 71 concerning the voluntariness of a confession will not be reversed unless it is contrary to the manifest weight of all the evidence. 72 The credibility of the witnesses regarding the voluntariness of a statement is to be determined by the trial court, and that determination will not be reversed unless contrary to the manifest weight of the evidence. 73

Where a defendant appeals the denial of his motion to suppress a confession, the evidence is reviewed in the light most favorable to the government. 74

Where the defendant failed to object to the admission of alleged involuntary statements at trial, he waived all but plain error. 75

§ 727 --Application of harmless error rule

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

The admission at a state criminal trial, in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment's due process clause, 76 of a defendant's involuntary confession is subject to harmless-error analysis. 77

◆ Observation: Before a federal constitutional error can be held harmless, the court must be able to declare a belief that it was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt. The court has the power to review the record de novo in order to determine an error's harmlessness. 78

◆ Caution: Where a defendant was motivated to confess to a government agent by a fear of physical violence at the hands of other inmates, 79 the risk that the confession was unreliable, coupled with the profound impact that the confession has upon the jury, requires a reviewing court to exercise extreme caution before determining that the admission of the confession at trial was harmless. 80

§ 727 --Application of harmless error rule [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Even if tape had not been admissible, admission would have been harmless error where state used tape to prove terroristic threat, for which defendant was acquitted, and defendant used tape in defense of both DWI and terroristic threat charges, even though defendant claimed he was harmed by his combative and abusive language, and fact that interpreter said words were slurred. Vasquez Garza v State (1990, Tex App Corpus Christi) 794 SW2d 530, reh overr (Aug 31, 1990) and petition for discretionary review ref (Jan 30, 1991).

b. Particular Matters Affecting Voluntariness [728-748]

§ 728 Factors to be considered under federal statute

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

A federal statute provides that the trial judge, in determining the issue of voluntariness, shall take into consideration all the circumstances surrounding the giving of the confession, 81 including five enumerated factors: (1) the time elapsing between the arrest and arraignment of the defendant making the confession, if it was made after arrest and before arraignment; 82 (2) whether the defendant knew the nature of the offense with which he was charged or of which he was suspected at the time of making the confession; (3) whether or not the defendant was advised or knew that he was not required to make any statement and that any such statement could be used against him; (4) whether or not the defendant had been advised prior to questioning of his right to the assistance of counsel; 83 and (5) whether or not the defendant was without the assistance of counsel when questioned and when giving a confession. 84

◆ Observation: The substance of the Miranda warnings 85 is repeated as the final three factors for determining the voluntariness of a confession under 18 USCS §§ 3501(b)(3)-(5). 86

The presence or absence of any of the above-mentioned factors need not be conclusive on the issue of the voluntariness of the confession. 87 The statutory factors do not constitute a mandatory checklist which must be affirmatively established by the accused before a confession may be found involuntary. The statute does not purport to exhaust all the factors which may bear on the voluntariness of a confession viewed in the totality of the circumstances of a particular case. 88 It is the affirmative presence of factors indicating an overbearance of the accused's will 89 which is significant in determining the voluntariness of the confession. 90

Under the statute, 91 an accused need not be advised of the specific statute he is suspected of violating before confessing. 92

§ 728 ----Factors to be considered under federal statute [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Motion to suppress is denied to criminal defendant with respect to statements made on first day of custody and is granted for statements made on second day, where Miranda warnings were given first day and not repeated on second day, since, in weighing factors under 18 USCS § 3501(b), length of detention, although reasonable, renders statements made on second day not voluntary. United States v Copeland (1993, SD NY) 830 F Supp 216.

The trial court did not err in a noncapital first-degree murder prosecution by denying defendant's motion to suppress inculpatory statements where the trial court found as fact that prior to the interview defendant was not arrested; he was given Miranda warnings, he understood those warnings, and he waived his rights; the interrogating officers wore civilian clothing, displayed no weapons, and the environment was not intimidating; defendant was calm and in control of his faculties; he was told that he was free to leave; he had experience with the criminal justice system; he was thirty-five and had worked in responsible managerial positions in different businesses; defendant stated that Agent Crawford was cordial during the interview and that he did not feel threatened; and the interview lasted thirty-six minutes. Although Agent Crawford conceded that some of his statements to defendant were untrue and several contained statements which defendant contends included implicit promises or threats, the untrue statements alone do not establish coercion, many were ambiguous, there were clearly times when Crawford was simply urging defendant to confess in order to ease his conscience, and defendant's voir dire testimony tends to belie the assertion that his confession was coerced. State v Hardy (1994) 339 NC 207, 451 SE2d 600.

Although a defendant in a first- degree murder prosecution contended that the totality of circumstances surrounding his statement, the presence of psychological coercion, and his condition show that his statement should not have been admitted, the court found based on substantial evidence that no threats or promises induced defendant to make his statement, that defendant was not under the influence of alcohol, was not in need of medical attention, and did not request food or beverage, and these findings are based on substantial evidence and are binding. State v Bowie (1995) 340 NC 199, 456 SE2d 771.

§ 729 Confession made to person in authority

Incriminating statement made by defendant charged with leaving scene of automobile accident involving death was properly admitted where defendant was coherent and cooperative at time he waived Miranda rights, and he spoke clearly and without hesitation. Lowe v State (1993, Ala App) 627 So 2d 1127, reh den, without op (Ala App) 1993 Ala Crim App LEXIS 1169 and cert den, without op (Ala) 1993 Ala LEXIS 1392.

Delay in taking defendant before judicial officer did not require suppression of his two confessions. As to first confession, within hour of his arrest at 5 p.m., defendant asked to speak to police officer and officer met with him as soon as other matters were completed. Between midnight, when interview began, and 3:30 a.m., when it ended, defendant confessed to all crimes with which he was later charged except one. There was no basis to suppress this confession either for unnecessary delay or for causal connection between confession and lapse of time; defendant's confession appeared to have been entirely prompted by his own purposes. As to second confession at 5:30 p.m., want of appearance before judicial officer did not constitute unnecessary delay, particularly since defendant's medical problems necessitated his spending part of day at hospital. Although details of events were sketchy, inasmuch as defendant had been confined for less than 24 hours, it was not state's burden to disprove that any delay in arraignment was simply for sake of delay or was motivated by ill- will. Rather, it was defendant's burden to show that delay was precipitating cause of confession and there was no such proof in record. Adams v State (1993) 314 Ark 431, 863 SW2d 285.

Defendant, who voluntarily accompanied police officer to station and who, during interview, told officer what defendant had "heard," was not undergoing custodial interrogation. Wilson v State (1993) 208 Ga App 812, 432 SE2d 211, 93 Fulton County D R 1835, cert den (Ga) slip op.

§ 730 Involuntariness of prior confession

The fact that one confession is involuntary and hence inadmissible does not necessarily mean that a subsequent confession will be involuntary. 95 Whether the subsequent confession is voluntary depends in large part on whether there was a break in the stream of events sufficient to insulate the second confession from the earlier taint. 96 This question, in turn, depends upon a number of subsidiary factors, including the time that passed between the confessions, the change in the place of interrogations, and the change in identity of the interrogators. 97 Also relevant is whether a defendant received renewed Miranda warnings, 98 whether he remained in custody following the first confession and through the second, whether he was denied access to counsel, and whether he initiated contact with authorities before his second confession. 99

Where a Drug Enforcement Administration agent coerced the defendant's first confession with improper tactics, nothing in the record suggested that the taint clinging to the first confession was dissipated, no significant time elapsed between the first questioning and when the defendant made his subsequent statement to another agent, the suspect was at all times in custody and under close police supervision with the same agents present on both occasions, the defendant's second statement was tainted by his first coerced confession and, therefore, was correctly suppressed. United States v Anderson (CA2 NY) 929 F2d 96.

§ 731 Psychological coercion, generally; advising or urging accused to tell truth

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

A confession is involuntary whether coerced by physical intimidation ¹ or by psychological pressure. ² However, psychological coercion does not render a confession per se involuntary, so that, in such circumstances, the totality of the circumstances test to determine voluntariness ³ applies. ⁴ However, threats ⁵—such as threats of violence ⁶—and deception or trickery ⁷ may, under certain circumstances, render a confession involuntary and therefore inadmissible. Furthermore, excessive delay in bringing the accused before a magistrate, ⁸ or an abnormally prolonged interrogation, ⁹ are also factors that may result in a finding that a confession was involuntary.

A mere adjuration to speak the truth, however, does not in itself render a confession involuntary. ¹⁰ For example, an officer's statement to the defendant that "it would be better for him to tell the truth" did not render the defendant's confession inadmissible. ¹¹ Nor was an interrogating officer's statement to the defendant that he "would feel better if he got it off his chest" was not improper inducement rendering a confession inadmissible. ¹² And a defendant's confession was not rendered inadmissible because her boyfriend, in the presence of law officers, urged her to tell the truth. ¹³

Case authorities:

Defendant's statements made after her arrest to armed federal agent who had searched her house and taken her companion to jail were not voluntary, where police officer without making explicit threats suggested to her that exercise of right to remain silent might result in harsher treatment by court or prosecutor. United States v Harrison (1994, CA9 Cal) 34 F3d 886, 94 CDOS 6916, 94 Daily Journal DAR 12709.

The trial court properly concluded that defendant's statements to police officers were voluntarily and freely made where the detective did not accuse defendant of lying, but rather informed him of the crime with which he might be charged and urged him to tell the truth and think about what would be better for him; at the time the detective made the statements defendant contended were coercive, the detective had already identified for defendant, and defendant had acknowledged, the others with him the night of the murder; and defendant's contention that he was intimidated or coerced by the detective's profanity was without merit in light of defendant's own use of profanity. State v McCullers (1995) 341 NC 19, 460 SE2d 163.

In prosecution for promoting prostitution, trial court did not err in admitting, as substantive evidence, prior inconsistent statement of prostitute, implicating defendant, where it was clear that statement had been made voluntarily, and that witness neither had been coerced into making statement nor had any motive to lie in making it. State v Nelson (1994) 74 Wash App 380, 874 P2d 170, review den 125 Wash 2d 1002, 886 P2d 1134.

While finding that countervailing evidence showed that defendant's statement or Miranda waiver was involuntary was foreclosed by requirement that governmental coercion cause involuntariness and by fact state met prima facie showing that no coercion existed, defendant could still show countervailing evidence that waiver was not knowing and intelligent. State v Lee (1993, App) 175 Wis 2d 348, 499 NW2d 250.

§ 732 Delay in arraignment; federal proceedings

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

In the case of McNabb v United States, the United States Supreme Court held that a confession of guilt, though not the result of coercion, physical or psychological, was inadmissible where made by one under arrest and detained in violation of law requiring one in custody to be brought before a United States Commissioner or judicial officer. 14 The current rule of criminal procedure, Rule 5(a) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, applicable in federal criminal prosecutions, is that an arrested person must be brought without unnecessary delay before the nearest available federal magistrate or, if a magistrate is not reasonably available, before a state or local judicial officer authorized by federal statute to arrest and imprison offenders for violations of federal law. 15 Thus, the McNabb rule was modified such that a confession made by one under arrest and detained too long in violation of Rule 5(a) is inadmissible in a federal criminal case. 16 The McNabb case has been followed in a number of cases decided in the United States Supreme Court and lower federal courts, and an illegal delay in arraignment has been held sufficient to render inadmissible a confession procured during the period of delay, 17 especially where it also appears that coercive measures were used to obtain confessions. 18

◆ Observation: The rule that a confession is inadmissible where obtained from an accused during an unlawful detention—unlawful because, after arrest, he was not brought before a magistrate "without unnecessary delay"—even though the confession otherwise appeared to be voluntary, has sometimes been referred to as the "McNabb-Mallory" rule. 19

Since the McNabb rule was predicated on the provision of Rule 5(a) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure requiring commitment "without unnecessary delay," it follows that the legality of the detention, so far as a confession obtained during that period is concerned, depends upon whether it was or was not necessary. 20 In this respect, no hard and fast rule could be laid down as to what circumstances may constitute "unnecessary delay" rendering a confession inadmissible, since the circumstances varied greatly from case to case, and from area to area, and whether a confession should be excluded was a question of law to be determined by the district judge. 21 Rule 5(a)'s requirement that persons under arrest before a committing magistrate "without unnecessary delay" does not call for mechanical or automatic obedience, 22 and the McNabb case did not stand for the proposition that arresting federal officers have to make a beeline to the commissioner's office. 23

The rule in the McNabb case has been qualified to the extent that where the delay in the arraignment was not illegal, or was necessary and reasonable under the circumstances, 24 as where the delay was due to the unavailability of a magistrate or commissioner, 25 confessions obtained during the delay are not inadmissible, provided they are otherwise voluntary. But this does not mean that an extended delay resulting in a confession will be sanctioned as an exercise of the discretion of arresting officers in finding exceptional circumstances. 26

By federal statute the trial judge, in determining the issue of voluntariness, shall take into consideration all the circumstances surrounding the giving of the confession, 27 including five enumerated factors, 28 one of which is the time elapsing between the arrest and arraignment of the accused making the confession, if it was made after arrest and before arraignment. 29 Furthermore, the "McNabb-Mallory" rule has been liberalized and, at least to some extent, legislatively overruled by a statutory provision which, in its pertinent portion provides that, in any federal prosecution, a confession made while the defendant was under arrest or other detention will not be inadmissible solely because of delay in bringing him before a magistrate, if such confession is found by the trial judge to have been made voluntarily, if the weight to be given the confession is left to the jury, and if such confession was made within six hours immediately following his arrest or other detention. 30 However, under the statute, the 6-hour time limitation will not apply if the delay beyond the 6-hour period is found by the trial judge to be reasonable considering the means of transportation and the distance to be traveled to the nearest available magistrate. 31 Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 5(a)'s prohibition against unreasonable delay must be read in conjunction with 18 USCS § 3501(c). 32 Under 18 USCS § 3501(c), delay alone does not make the confession inadmissible; rather, it is the voluntary character of the confession that constitutes the real test of its admissibility. 33

Generally speaking, it is the period between arrest and confession that is critical, rather than the period between arrest and the initial appearance before a magistrate; 34 if the confession is timely, any subsequent delay between confession and the appearance is not significant. 35 However, it has been held that there may be circumstances in which a voluntary in-custody confession, 36 made subsequent to arrest and prior to an appearance before a magistrate, may be suppressed solely because of the delay in bringing the accused before a magistrate. 37

Under the federal statute, 38 delay is to be measured from the beginning of an arrest or other detention for a violation of federal law. 39 Therefore, if a person is arrested and held on a federal charge by any law enforcement officer—federal, state, or local—that person is under arrest or other detention for purposes of 18 USCS § 3501(c) and its 6-hour safe harbor period. 40 If, however, the person is arrested and held on state charges, the federal statute 41 does not apply and the safe harbor period is not implicated, even if the arresting officers (who will almost certainly be agents of the state or one of its subdivisions) believe or have cause to believe that the person may also have violated federal law. 42

◆ Observation: The term delay presumes an obligation to act. Consequently, there can be no delay in bringing a person before a federal magistrate until the duty to do so arises. The duty to bring a person before a federal magistrate does not arise until the person has been arrested or detained for a federal offense. 43 An exception to the rule that only detention for a federal crime triggers the federal statute 44 may exist if the accused can show that there was a working arrangement between state and federal officers to aid and abet the federal officers in interrogating the accused in violation of Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 5(a)'s requirement of prompt arraignment. 45 Any period during which the accused receives medical treatment at his own request is excluded in computing unnecessary delay. 46

Practice Aids: Construction and application of provision of Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968, as amended (18 USCS sec. 3501(c)), that defendant's confession shall not be inadmissible in evidence in federal criminal prosecution solely because of delay in presentment before magistrate 124 ALR Fed 263.

FR Crim P, Rule 5 was amended in 1995 to address the interplay between the requirements for a prompt appearance before a magistrate judge and the processing of persons arrested for the offense of unlawfully fleeing to avoid prosecution under 18 USCS § 1073, when no federal prosecution is intended.

Case authorities:

There was no merit to defendant's contention that his confession should have been suppressed since he was interrogated for ten hours and confessed prior to being taken before a magistrate in violation of GS § 15A-501(2), since the officers fully advised defendant of his constitutional rights before the interrogation began; if defendant had been taken before a magistrate, he would have been advised of those same rights; and the court cannot hold that defendant would have exercised his right to remain silent if he had been warned of this right by a magistrate rather than the officer. State v Littlejohn (1995) 340 NC 750, 459 SE2d 629.

§ 733 --Effect of delay in excess of federal statutory limit of 6 hours

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Under the federal statutory provision pertaining to confessions resulting from delay in arraignment, 47 in any federal prosecution, a confession made while the defendant was under arrest or other detention will not be inadmissible solely because of delay in bringing him before a magistrate, if such confession is found by the trial judge to have been made voluntarily, if the weight to be given the confession is left to the jury, and if such confession was made within 6 hours immediately following his arrest or other detention. 48

◆ Reminder: The federal statute 49 is applicable only when a person is arrested or detained for violating federal law. An arrest on state charges will generally not trigger the federal statute even if the person subsequently confesses to a federal crime. 50

However, the 6-hour time limitation will not apply if a delay beyond the 6-hour period is found by the trial judge to be reasonable considering the means of transportation and the distance to be traveled to the nearest available magistrate. 51 Even if the delay in bringing an accused before a magistrate or judicial officer is in excess of the statutory limit of 6 hours and such delay is unnecessary, the statute does not require a finding that the confession obtained was involuntary. 52 With respect to such post-6-hour confessions, it has been held that such delay is only one factor to be considered by the court in determining voluntariness. 53 Six hours is just the minimum period which will pass muster without further inquiry. 54 The court must be alert to the possibility that the delay was used to conduct an improperly coercive interrogation. 55 The court should scrutinize for reasonableness delays in excess of 6 hours which are not made necessary by transportation problems. 56 The court retains the discretion to exclude confessions due to an excessive delay, after considering such factors as the deterrent purpose of the exclusionary rule, the importance of judicial integrity, and the likelihood that admission of the confession would encourage constitutional violations. 57 If the government gives no legitimate excuse for not arraigning the defendant promptly, statements made after a lengthy period of confinement, and followed soon thereafter by the overdue appearance before the magistrate, are inadmissible. 58

A delay of more than 6 hours between arrest and arraignment has been found to be reasonable, thereby warranting admission of a confession obtained before arraignment, where the delay is due (1) to the unavailability of a magistrate, 59 (2) to routine processing of the arrest, 60 (3) to the routine procedure of allowing a defendant who is intoxicated upon arrest to stay in jail over night to regain sobriety, 61 and (4) to transporting the accused from the place of arrest to the nearest magistrate. 62

◆ Comment: The objective of the Supreme Court's decision in County of Riverside v McLaughlin, 500 US 44, 114 L Ed 2d 49, 111 S Ct 1661, 91 CDOS 3503, 91 Daily Journal DAR 5506, holding that where an arrested individual does not receive a probable cause determination within 48 hours, the burden shifts to the government to demonstrate the existence of a bona fide emergency or other extraordinary circumstance, 63 has been contrasted with the focus of 18 USCS § 3501. McLaughlin's 48-hour requirement arose out of a concern that, following a warrantless arrest, prolonged detention by a state based on incorrect or unfounded suspicion may unjustly imperil a suspect's job, interrupt his source of income, and impair his family relationships. On the other hand, 18 USCS § 3501 focuses on voluntariness and addresses the concern that a federal conviction be based on reliable evidence. Given these two distinct underlying purposes, the argument that, under McLaughlin, 60 hours between an arrest and confession is not tolerable was found to be without merit. 64

[SUPPLEMENT]

Practice Aids: Construction and application of provision of Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968, as amended (18 USCS sec. 3501(c)), that defendant's confession shall not be inadmissible in evidence in federal criminal prosecution solely because of delay in presentment before magistrate 124 ALR Fed 263.

Case authorities:

The language in 18 USCS § 3501(c)—which provides that a confession made by a person while under arrest or other detention in the custody of any law enforcement officer or law enforcement agency is not inadmissible in a federal criminal prosecution solely because of delay in bringing the person before a federal magistrate, if such confession was made or given within 6 hours after the person's arrest or detention—does not apply to statements made by a person who is being held solely on state criminal charges by state or local law enforcement authorities, because (1) the term "delay" in § 3501(c) presumes an obligation to act, and there can be no delay in bringing a person before a federal magistrate until, at a minimum, there is some obligation to bring the person before such a judicial officer in the first place, and (2) the term "arrest or other detention" in § 3501(c) refers to an arrest or detention for a violation of federal law, since a duty to present a person to a federal magistrate under Rule 5(a) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure—which, as part of the scheme for initiating a federal prosecution, requires an initial appearance before a federal magistrate—does not arise until the person has been arrested for a federal offense; where a person has been arrested and held only on state charges, § 3501(c) does not apply even if the arresting officers, who almost certainly will be agents of the state or one of its subdivisions, believe or have cause to believe that the person also may have violated federal law. United States v Alvarez-Sanchez (US) 128 L Ed 2d 319, 114 S Ct 1599.

§ 734 --State proceedings

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Since the "McNabb-Mallory" rule that a confession is inadmissible where obtained from an accused during an unlawful detention—unlawful because, after arrest, he was not brought before a magistrate "without unnecessary delay"—even though the confession otherwise appeared to be voluntary, 65 was not constitutionally grounded, it was not binding upon the states. 66 Although most states have rejected or ignored the rule, 67 they have at least regarded an unreasonable delay in bringing an accused before a magistrate as a factor which, together with other circumstances, may produce an involuntary and hence inadmissible confession in violation of the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. 68

Thus, depending upon the attendant circumstances, a confession may be admissible notwithstanding a delay, 69 or it may be inadmissible if it was the product of an unnecessary or unreasonable delay. 70 To justify the exclusion of a statement, the defendant must show that the delay in arraignment produced his admissions or that there was an essential connection between the illegal detention and the admissions of guilt. 71

A three-day delay between the defendant's return to the state, following extradition, and his appearance before the municipal court did not violate the rule providing that there should be no unnecessary delay in taking the arrested person before a judicial officer, where the statements were given when the defendant was first questioned and were completely unrelated to the delay. Branscomb v State, 299 Ark 482, 774 SW2d 426, later proceeding (Ark) 1992 Ark LEXIS 121.

Where, in a prosecution for sexual assault, the defendant was detained for seven hours before being taken to a magistrate, during which time he told an investigator about his personal history of being sexually abused and ultimately confessed, the defendant's confession was properly admitted into evidence, insofar as the delay in taking the defendant before a magistrate was easily explained by the defendant's voluntary discussion with the investigator and no evidence indicated any causal connection between the delay and the confession. Sallings v State (Tex App Dallas) 789 SW2d 408, petition for discretionary review ref (Sep 12, 1990).

A seven-hour delay between the inception of the defendant's interrogation and his being taken before a magistrate did not require the suppression of his confessions, where the murders to which the defendant confessed were old ones, it was necessary for the police officers to spend time finding and reviewing the files to corroborate the details of the confessions, and where, in any event, the delay was not causally connected to the confessions. Niehuse v State (Tex App Dallas) 761 SW2d 491.

The written confession to participation in triple murders during the robbery of drugstore was not involuntary as caused by the seven-day delay in bringing the defendant before magistrate, where on the evening of the initial arrest the officer informed the suspect that investigating officers had spoken to his friend and the suspect immediately indicated his desire to confess. Johnson v State (Tex App San Antonio) 651 SW2d 303.

Absent the showing of a causal connection between the defendant's jail cell confession to the sexual abuse of a child on the day following his arrest and the delay in taking the defendant before a magistrate, the validity of the confession was not affected by such delay. Cummings v State (Tex App Amarillo) 651 SW2d 14.

A confession should have been suppressed where there were nine hours between the defendant's seizure and his presentment before a magistrate, since the confession was the direct result of prolonged, illegal, custodial interrogation. State v Mays, 172 W Va 486, 307 SE2d 655.

While the mere fact that a confession is made after a prolonged examination of the accused by police officers does not necessarily render the confession inadmissible as evidence against the accused on the theory that it is an involuntary confession, 72 and the Fourteenth Amendment does not prohibit a state from such detention and interrogation so long as the circumstances appear reasonable and non-coercive, 73 in certain instances, in the context of the totality of the circumstances, 74 interrogation by law enforcement officers may be so prolonged, either continuous or at intervals, as to render a confession involuntary. 75 An interrogation can be so prolonged and unrelenting, especially when accompanied by deprivation of refreshment, rest, or relief, as to accomplish extortion of an involuntary confession which is not admissible in evidence. 76

§ 735 ----Prolonged interrogation [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Defendant was not entitled to suppression of confession on basis that he requested end to interrogation since, when defendant questioned need to name his accomplices during videotaped confession, he was merely questioning scope of interrogation and was not asking for end to interrogation, and answer to question by assistant district attorney was merely encouragement to answer and was not coercion. People v Paltoo (1992, 1st Dept) 186 AD2d 452, 589 NYS2d 19, app den 81 NY2d 765, 594 NYS2d 727, 610 NE2d 400.

As to physical mistreatment, generally, as a factor in determining the voluntariness of a confession, see § 736.

§ 736 Physical mistreatment; withholding of adequate facilities, food, rest, relief, or medication

View Entire Section

A confession is involuntary when coerced by physical intimidation. 77 Physical mistreatment is but one circumstance, albeit a circumstance which by itself weighs heavily, to be considered in determining if a confession is the product of a rational intellect and a free will. 78 Even so, where during the entire period preceding his confession the defendant was without adequate food, without counsel, 79 and without the assistance of family or friends, was, for all practical purposes, held incommunicado, and was physically weakened and in intense pain, this total combination of circumstances, 80 was so inherently coercive that its very existence is irreconcilable with the possession of mental freedom by a lone suspect against whom its full coercive force is brought to bear. 81 Furthermore, deprivation of refreshment, rest, or relief, when combined with a prolonged and unrelenting interrogation, may result in the finding that a confession was involuntary and therefore, inadmissible. 82 A confession was also held involuntary, where the defendant had been thrown naked into a small punishment cell with two other men for 14 days, where the cell had no window, contained no bed or other furnishings or facilities, except a hole flush with the floor which served as a commode, and where he subsisted on a daily fare of 12 ounces of thin soup and eight ounces of water. 83 Similarly, a confession was determined to be involuntary, where the defendant had no counsel, and he had been deprived of food, sleep, and medication for his high blood pressure. 84 But, the defendants' contention that they had not slept or eaten before giving their confessions did not establish duress sufficient to invalidate such confessions, where any duress arising from the lack of sleep or food was not attributable to the law enforcement officers but to the defendants' own actions in trying to elude the police the previous night. 85

§ 736 ----Physical mistreatment; withholding of adequate facilities, food, rest, relief, or medication [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

The court would reject the contention that the defendant's confession to murder was not voluntary where (1) on February 6, the police were called to a location at which the defendant, who was a suspect in a murder prosecution, set himself afire, (2) the defendant was arrested and placed in intensive care in critical condition, (3) the police did not interview the defendant until February 15, when they were advised by physicians that he was well enough, and (4) during the interview, the defendant waived his Miranda rights and confessed to the murder; the defendant was stable, alert, coherent and cooperative and there was not evidence that he lacked the ability to exercise a reasoned choice at the time of his confession. Commonwealth v Bracey (1995, Pa) 662 A2d 1062, application gr (Pa) 1995 Pa LEXIS 1254.

§ 737 --Use of violence

A confession induced by violence, 86 as, for example, by striking or whipping the accused, 87 is involuntary, insofar as the confession was the result of the violence used. 88 In this regard, it has been held that, notwithstanding the totality of the circumstances test generally applied to determine voluntariness of a confession, 89 a confession which is the product of violence is per se involuntary. 90 However, the fact that, in answer to an officer's question, an accused makes a statement admitting the commission of a crime at gunpoint during his arrest does not necessarily render the statement involuntary because of the circumstances, where the officer did not draw the gun for the purpose of his question, but based on the dangerousness of the suspect. 91

◆ Practice guide: The accused is allowed to show the jury the part of his body bearing marks of violence allegedly inflicted by law enforcement officers in obtaining a confession. 92

Case authorities:

Voluntariness of defendant's statements to police was not impaired by arresting officers' use of force to apprehend him where officer used no more force than necessary to subdue him, and inculpatory statements sought to be suppressed were not made until some 20 minutes after scuffle and after defendant had waived his Miranda rights. People v Alvarez (1992, 1st Dept) 186 AD2d 56, 588 NYS2d 268.

§ 738 Threats

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

A confession must not be extracted by any sort of threat; 93 in this regard, confessions induced by fear on the part of the accused as the result of a threat have been found to be involuntary. 94

Thus, for example, where accused police officers were warned that if they refused to answer certain questions they would be removed from office, their subsequent confessions were held involuntary. 95 However, a police officer's statement to the defendant that he would be taken upstairs and booked if he didn't want to talk did not constitute a threat, 96 and a confession has been deemed valid even though a police officer threatened to give the defendant a lie detector test if she did not tell the truth. 97

◆ Observation: An officer does not overreach by conducting an interview in full uniform, including a service revolver, unless he threatens the defendant. 98

§ 739 --Threats of violence

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

A finding of coercion need not depend upon actual violence by a government agent; a credible threat is sufficient. 99 Thus, it has been recognized that a threat of violence to the person of the accused 1 —including threats of "mob violence" 2 —renders a confession induced thereby involuntary, so that such confession cannot constitutionally be used against the person giving it. 3 In some jurisdictions the rule is that, notwithstanding the totality of the circumstances test generally applicable to determine the voluntariness of a confession, 4 a confession which is the product of the threat of violence is per se involuntary. 5 However, where the threat of violence has not been specifically connected to the statements of the accused, a confession has nonetheless been held to have been made voluntarily. 6

◆ Observation: In determining whether a threat of violence has been made which constitutes coercion, it has been said that the defendant's subjective understanding of the statement or statements in question is irrelevant. 7 However, an accused's belief that a person suggesting that he could help the accused if the accused admitted a crime had authority to do so has sometimes been deemed valid in determining the voluntariness of a confession subsequently made, even though the person making the suggestion had no real authority to influence the subsequent course of events. 8

◆ Practice guide: Error in admitting into evidence an oral confession obtained by threatened physically coercive tactics on the part of an agent of the police is not subject to a harmless error analysis. 9

§ 740 Promises or inducements

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

A confession must not be obtained by any direct nor implied promises, however slight; 10 A confession induced by a promise to confer a benefit upon the accused has been recognized as involuntary. 11

Confessions have been determined to be involuntary when made in response to promises to release or not arrest relatives of the accused. 12 Furthermore, confessions induced by promises of immunity to the accused have been found to be involuntary, 13 as have confessions induced by promises of leniency. 14 A confession is involuntary where a person in authority makes an express or clearly implied promise of leniency or advantage for the accused which is a motivating cause of the decision to confess. 15 And a confession induced by a parole officer's promise to a suspect that the results of a lie detector test would not be made available to the police was involuntary and inadmissible. 16

However, in some instances, confessions have been found to be voluntary notwithstanding promises made to the accused. 17 An official who encourages cooperation with the government and who informs the defendant of realistically expected penalties for cooperation or noncooperation does not offer an illegal inducement. 18 In this regard, promises by detectives to help the accused with his collateral health problems, that he would receive help for his drug and alcohol problems, if he talked to them are far different from promises of leniency in the criminal proceeding. 19 A police officer's statement to the defendant that things would go easier for him if he confessed has been held to be innocuous and as not constituting an improper promise of leniency. 20 Nor was an interrogating officer's statement to the defendant that he "would feel better if he got it off his chest" an improper inducement rendering his confession inadmissible. 21 And, as distinguished from impermissible promises of leniency, expressions of sympathy by an officer are not coercive. 22 Likewise, the fact that a police officer agrees to make one's cooperation known to the prosecuting authorities and to the court does not render a confession involuntary. 23 It has also been held that allowing the defendant to speak with his girlfriend for five minutes is not a sufficient

§ 740 ----Promises or inducements [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Defendant's incriminating statements made during search of his residence were not involuntary because officers informed defendant that United States Attorney would be apprised of his cooperation, since officer did not promise him leniency. United States v Broussard (1996, CA5 Tex) 80 F3d 1025.

Defendant was not entitled to suppression of his inculpatory statement to police on ground that it was made on promise of immunity and was therefore involuntary where officer testified that defendant requested immunity and that he told defendant that he did not have authority to grant immunity, and investigator testified that defendant did not request immunity in his presence; unsworn written statement in which defendant stated that he was told that immunity would be granted did not constitute admissible evidence of promise of immunity. People v Secore (1992, 4th Dept) 187 AD2d 1008, 591 NYS2d 126, app den 81 NY2d 847, 595 NYS2d 746, 611 NE2d 785.

The defendant's confession to selling marijuana was not rendered involuntary by a police offer to inform the district attorney if the defendant were willing to cooperate with future drug investigations; although an offer of lenient treatment in return for a defendant's cooperation in the investigation of the crime charged is an impermissible inducement and renders a confession involuntary, an offer of lenient treatment for potential cooperation in the investigation of unrelated crimes is permissible. Commonwealth v Laatsch (1995, Pa) 661 A2d 1365, reh den (Pa) 1995 Pa LEXIS 675.

In criminal prosecution where defendant was convicted of attempted first degree intentional homicide, party to crime, for attempted murder of her husband, fact that trial court expressly found defendant's incriminating statements to police to be voluntary and not product of improper pressures exercised by police and denied defendant's suppression motion indicated that court did not find credible defendant's assertions of police promises to induce incriminating statements. State v Echols (1993) 175 Wis 2d 653, 499 NW2d 631, cert den (US) 62 USLW 3251.

In criminal prosecution where defendant was convicted of attempted first degree intentional homicide, party to crime, for attempted murder of her husband, although trial court did not make specific finding concerning defendant's claim that promises were made to her to induce incriminating statements, factual findings of trial court on record supporting denial of defendant's suppression motion were not against great weight and clear preponderance of evidence where court determined that defendant's incriminating statements were voluntary because they were knowingly, understandingly and freely made and therefore statements were not induced by police promises. State v Echols (1993) 175 Wis 2d 653, 499 NW2d 631, cert den (US) 62 USLW 3251.

A defendant's confession to robbery was induced by coercive behavior on the part of investigating officials and had to be suppressed, where the defendant's mother was incarcerated for the same robbery at the time of the defendant's interrogation, there was subtle reference to her plight during the interrogation, and she was released shortly after the defendant confessed. State v Davis (App) 115 Idaho 462, 767 P2d 837.

A statement by a police officer that, if the defendant cooperated and admitted to burglaries, he would charge the defendant's wife, who was seven-and-one-half months pregnant and had a young son, with a misdemeanor so she would not have to go to jail, constituted tactics overbearing the defendant's will. People v Keene (4th Dept) 148 App Div 2d 977, 539 NYS2d 214.

§ 741 --Effect of authority of person offering inducement

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

While a confession is not ipso facto involuntary merely because it was made to a person in authority, 25 where an inducement has been extended to the accused, the strength of the inducement may turn upon the power of the person offering it. 26 A relatively slight inducement held out by a person in authority may render a confession involuntary because the accused would have reason to believe that such a person is not only credible but also is in a position to give effect to the inducement. 27 The following are illustrative of persons in authority within the meaning of this rule: a law enforcement officer, 28 a prosecuting attorney, 29 including a private prosecutor; 30 a magistrate; 31 and a coroner. 32 Furthermore, a confession made after a polygraph examiner led the accused to believe that he could help the accused get his job back was properly excluded as involuntary. 33 However, a private detective is not a person in authority within the meaning of the rule. 34 Nor was a representative of the owner of stolen property, who prepared an inventory thereof and obtained defendant's signature thereto, a person in authority within the meaning of the rule. 35

◆ Observation: Despite the view that an accused's subjective understanding that a threat of violence has been made against him has been held not to be relevant in determining whether such a threat has actually been made and thus whether a subsequent confession is voluntary, 36 it has also been said that the fact that the person involved in making inducements to the accused has no actual power to initiate or terminate criminal proceedings against the accused is not the issue, but, rather, the important question is whether such person represented to the defendant that he had real or apparent authority to alter or influence a certain course of events in the event the defendant capitulated and whether the defendant reasonably believed that changing his statement was necessary to obtain preferential treatment. 37

§ 742 Use of polygraph

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

A confession otherwise voluntary is not rendered inadmissible by reason of the fact that a lie detector was used during the accused's interrogation. 38 However, a confession is involuntary and hence inadmissible where the police use a polygraph examination in a coercive manner in an attempt to extract a confession from the defendant. 39

◆ Observation: It is not improper to inform an accused that her polygraph tests indicate deception, when that is the case, nor to resume questioning if the test results are adverse. 40

§ 742 ----Use of polygraph [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Results of polygraph examination of defendant charged with criminal activities relating to dealings with savings institution were more prejudicial than probative and therefore properly excluded where examination was administered by defense- selected expert apparently without government's participation and defendant wished to present evidence before jury. United States v Pettigrew (1996, CA5 Tex) 77 F3d 1500.

District court did not abuse its discretion in limiting defendant's cross-examination of government witness concerning witness's untruthful statements made during polygraph examination given limited purpose of four test questions in polygraph examination which were designed to elicit untruthful answers to give examiner benchmark for comparing results and reactions to substantive questions, and fact that defendant was able to cross-examine witness as to prior false statements and bad acts. United States v Dillard (1994, CA7 Ill) 43 F3d 299.

In prosecution for dealing in drugs within 1000 feet of school, although solicitation of testimony by prosecutor that witness had agreed to take polygraph test as part of plea bargain was improper, error did not require reversal where (1) witness' testimony did not imply that he had passed polygraph test; (2) testimony, although important, was largely echoed by testimony of fellow informant; and (3) neither testimony of witness or informant was nearly as damaging as that of another witness, who had used defendant as supplier of LSD over period of months. Lay v State (1995, Ind) 659 NE2d 1005, reh den (Mar 7, 1996).

While evidence that defendant did, or did not, submit to polygraph examination was inadmissible, inadvertent remark by prosecution witness referring to defendant's having taken examination was not prejudicial, since there was no reaction from jury, and court sustained defense counsel's objection. State v Weston (1995, Mo App) 912 SW2d 96.

Police officer's telling defendant, when officer was questioning defendant at police station following defendant's having taken polygraph examination, that defendant had not done well on examination did not render defendant's subsequent confession involuntary, since defendant did not establish that statement was either untrue or actual cause of confession. State v Farley (1994, W Va) 452 SE2d 50.

§ 743 Deception or trickery

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

While deception weighs against a finding of voluntariness, and is relevant, it is but one factor to be considered within the totality of the circumstances in determining the voluntariness of a confession. 41 The fact that a confession was procured by deception or subterfuge does not invalidate the confession as a matter of law. 42

Whether deception renders a confession involuntary depends upon whether the deception interjected the type of extrinsic considerations that would overcome a defendant's will by distorting an otherwise rational choice of whether to confess or remain silent. 43

When the police told a female suspect that she was in jeopardy of losing her welfare benefits and the custody of her children, but offered to recommend leniency 44 if she would confess, this brand of police trickery was considered inherently coercive. 45

◆ Comment: It has been observed that this particular deceptive practice did more than affect the suspect's beliefs regarding her actual guilt or innocence, and judgments regarding the evidence connecting her to the crime. It also distorted the suspect's rational choice by introducing a completely extrinsic consideration—an empty but plausible threat 46 to take away something to which she and her children would otherwise be entitled. 47

Other illustrative forms of deception or trickery include: pretending that the state had certain evidence against the accused; 48 pretending that an accomplice had incriminated the accused or had confessed; 49 pretending that certain evidence favorable to the accused was nonexistent; 50 disguising an informer as a fellow prisoner; 51 pretending friendship or concern by a person in authority; 52 playing upon an accused's superstition; 53 and a promise of secrecy. 54

Of the numerous varieties of police trickery, however, a lie that relates to a suspect's connection to the crime is the least likely to render a confession involuntary. 55

§ 743 ----Deception or trickery [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Confession of defendant convicted of having sexual intercourse with mentally retarded woman was not rendered involuntary because during interview police purported to have evidence of sexual activity that incriminated defendant and falsely stated that there were bruises on complainant's arms and legs indicating that force had been used, where rule regarding use of deliberate falsehoods by police required that falsehoods intrinsic to facts of alleged offense would be treated as one of totality of circumstances surrounding confession; in this case deliberate misrepresentations were intrinsic and, from totality of circumstances, were not of type that would reasonably induce false confession. State v Kelekolio (1993) 74 Hawaii 479, 849 P2d 58.

In second degree murder prosecution, defendant was not entitled to suppression of statements made to police since ruse employed by detectives to get him outside his home was not so fundamentally unfair as to deny due process, and thus did not render his arrest unlawful, where detectives told him that they were from auto crimes unit and that they wished to speak with him about automobile, and he voluntarily left his apartment and accompanied detectives to precinct. People v Rosario (1992, 2d Dept) 186 AD2d 598, 588 NYS2d 393, app den 81 NY2d 794, 594 NYS2d 740, 610 NE2d 413.

The fact that an officer misrepresented to a defendant the strength of the evidence against him, while insufficient by itself to make an otherwise voluntary confession inadmissible, is one factor to consider among the totality of circumstances in determining voluntariness. Holland v McGinnis (CA7 Ill) 963 F2d 1044, cert den (US) 122 L Ed 2d 360, 113 S Ct 1053.

Deception does not render a confession involuntary. As long as the decision is a product of the suspect's own balancing of competing considerations, the confession is voluntary. United States v Miller (CA9 Cal) 984 F2d 1028, 93 CDOS 658, 93 Daily Journal DAR 1295, cert den (US) 126 L Ed 2d 210, 114 S Ct 258.

Where a detective told the defendant, subsequently convicted of first-degree murder, that he thought the defendant would be charged with second-degree murder and prepared a probable cause affidavit to that effect, but also told the defendant that the actual charge would be up to the state attorney, the argument that the defendant's statement should be suppressed because the detective misled him about the crime with which he would be charged was found to be without merit. Young v State (Fla) 579 So 2d 721, 16 FLW S 192, reh den (Fla) 16 FLW S 373 and cert den (US) 117 L Ed 2d 438, 112 S Ct 1198, reh den (US) 118 L Ed 2d 416, 112 S Ct 1710.

§ 744 Mental or physical condition or capacity of accused

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

A defendant's history of emotional instability has been noted in a court's determination that his confession was involuntary and that its admission into evidence at trial therefore violated due process. ⁵⁶ Furthermore, where the evidence established by the strongest probability that the accused was insane and incompetent at the time of the confession, it has been held, particularly in view of other circumstances, ⁵⁷ such as the 8 to 9 hour sustained interrogation of the accused, ⁵⁸ the absence of friends relatives or legal counsel, ⁵⁹ and the composition of the confession by a deputy sheriff rather than the accused, that a pretrial confession by a defendant accused of robbery was involuntary and therefore that its admission into evidence was contrary to due process. ⁶⁰ However, even if a suspect's unsolicited confession to police was allegedly prompted by mental illness, which supposedly interfered with his rational intellect and free will, the admission of the confession into evidence did not violate the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment where there was no evidence of coercive police conduct. 61

The subnormal intelligence of the accused is one factor which has been pointed to in support of the conclusion that an accused's pretrial confession was involuntary. 62 However, confessions have been found to be voluntary notwithstanding the accused's subnormal intelligence, in certain instances, 63 and, in this regard, it has been stated that subnormal mentality does not ipso facto make a confession involuntary, where the subnormality has not deprived the accused of the ability to understand the meaning and ramifications of his confession. 64

Where the accused was physically incapacitated at the time, 65 a confession has been found to be inadmissible. 66

A confession was held involuntary, where the defendant, who was in the prison hospital with a bullet wound in the leg, signed the confession after a morphine injection 67 when he was in a "kind of slumber," feverish, and in intense pain. 68

However, one who has suffered physical harm can still be competent to give a voluntary confession. 69

§ 744 ----Mental or physical condition or capacity of accused [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

In capital murder prosecution, trial court considered evidence of defendant's low I.Q. in determining voluntariness of incriminating statements made by defendant, but it properly admitted such statements where there was no evidence of coercive police activity. Livingston v State (1994) 264 Ga 402, 444 SE2d 748, 94 Fulton County D R 2234.

Defendant's confession given to FBI agent in hospital after he was in coma for 30 days following automobile accident was voluntary where defendant was confused as to all matters relating to time but otherwise was lucid in answering questions. United States v Robertson (1994, CA10 Kan) 19 F3d 1318.

The evidence on voir dire did not show that defendant lacked the mental capacity to waive his rights and confess, and the trial court did not err by concluding that defendant knowingly and understandingly waived his rights and that defendant's inculpatory statements were admissible in his murder trial, where defendant offered no evidence that tended to show that he was insane or that he did not voluntarily and understandingly waive his rights; an SBI agent testified that at the time defendant was being questioned, he responded appropriately and completely and did not appear to be under the influence of alcohol or drugs; defendant responded to the questions in a sensible manner and did not exhibit any bizarre or unusual behavior whatsoever; and during questioning, defendant chose not to answer certain questions and eventually decided on his own that he should not answer further questions without the assistance of an attorney. State v Ingle (1994) 336 NC 617, 445 SE2d 880.

The trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to suppress an inculpatory statement defendant gave to police while she was in custody on the ground she lacked the capacity to knowingly and voluntarily waive her rights, since defendant gave appropriate and responsive answers to officers' questions about defendant's age, date of birth, and place of residence, among other things; defendant could walk and climb stairs unassisted; defendant stated to the officer that she had consumed alcohol but was unimpaired by it; and, in the officer's opinion, defendant was not impaired to the extent that she did not understand what she was saying and what he was asking her. State v Wilson (1995) 340 NC 720, 459 SE2d 192.

There was no error in a first-degree murder prosecution in the admission of defendant's incriminating statements where defendant drank an organophosphate pesticide and told a friend shortly before losing consciousness that he had killed his father, and described the killing to his family after he regained consciousness in the hospital. The trial court's findings that defendant was conscious, alert and appeared in control of his faculties at the time the statements were made, that the organophosphates had metabolized when he made the statement to his family, and that the drugs with which he was treated rendered him more coherent and rational were supported by the record. Furthermore, defendant's psychiatric expert testified that defendant was awake and able to communicate with the medical staff prior to the statement to his family, that defendant had appeared coherent and engaged in logical conversation with her, and that his medication was having a positive effect on his cognitive abilities. The very fact that defendant not only remembers making the statements but testified as to his motivation for making those statements belies any claim that the statements were not voluntary based on his mental capacity. Finally, defendant makes no claim of coercion by his friend or family members and therefore had no basis for suppression of his statements. State v Pleasant (1995) 342 NC 366, 464 SE2d 284.

If police do not employ coercive tactics, fact that defendant is undergoing medical treatment or experiencing pain is not determinative on issue of voluntariness of confession. State v Schambow (1993, App) 176 Wis 2d 286, 500 NW2d 362.

§ 745 Confession by minor

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Although a confession is not inadmissible merely because the accused is a minor, ⁷⁰ the age of the child is a factor which, together with other circumstances, ⁷¹ may properly be considered. ⁷² Thus, a minor's confession has been held admissible, notwithstanding his or her age, on the ground that the particular circumstances involved showed that the confession was voluntary, ⁷³ although in other instances a minor's confession has not been held admissible because the minor's age, in conjunction with other circumstances involved, showed that the confession was not voluntary. ⁷⁴

Although it is preferable to have responsible adults present during the questioning of juveniles, their absence does not necessitate a finding of involuntariness of the juvenile's statement. 75 However, in a prosecution for murder, the confessions of the defendants who were 16 and 17 years old were inadmissible, where the defendants' mother, with whom they lived, had gone to the police station twice requesting to see her sons and her requests had been denied. 76

◆ Observation: A minor's confession is inadmissible where it is obtained in violation of a juvenile code requiring a police officer taking a minor into custody to take him immediately and directly before the juvenile court or to deliver him to the juvenile officer or person acting for him. 77

§ 745 ----Confession by minor [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Fifteen-year-old defendant was not entitled to suppression of statements made during questioning at precinct house on night following crime spree, despite isolation from his mother and other "supportive adults" who attempted to see him at station, where defendant deceived police by asserting that he was 16 years old and by using false identification to buttress his assertion, there was no evidence that police employed deception or trickery in order to isolate defendant, police made his precise location known to defendant's family, neither defendant nor anyone on his behalf requested assistance of counsel, and all police questioning ceased when fact of defendant's true age finally emerged from his mother and was verified. People v Salaam (1993) 83 NY2d 51, 607 NYS2d 899, 629 NE2d 371.

The trial court did not err in a first- degree murder prosecution by denying defendant's motion to suppress a statement he had given to SBI agent Murphy where defendant placed great emphasis on his age and on his testimony that the warnings concerning his constitutional rights did not mean anything to him when he waived them, but the trial court found that defendant wanted to talk to agent Murphy, that he told Murphy that he understood each right he was waiving, that the agent had applied no pressure or coercion to defendant, the physical surroundings were not coercive, there was no evidence of a display of weapons, officers took defendant and his girlfriend to Burger King; officers carefully went over the juvenile rights form with defendant; defendant had failed three grades in school, but had made them up during summer school and could read at a ninth grade level; there was no showing of subnormal intelligence; defendant had an opportunity to sleep and eat before he was questioned; and defendant recited his constitutional rights when Florida officers began to read them to him. State v Bunnell (1995) 340 NC 74, 455 SE2d 426.

Police officer's interview of 13- year- old in principal's office at juvenile's school was not custodial interrogation. State ex rel. Juvenile Dep't v Loreda (In re Loreda) (1993) 125 Or App 390, 865 P2d 1312.

Family court failed to make adequate findings in concluding that questioning at state trooper's vehicle was investigative detention where juvenile alleged that uncle who brought him to vehicle was acting as constable and took juvenile into custody to allow for interrogation by trooper, rather than state's view that uncle was helping juvenile, and questioning by trooper was brief investigative detention. In re S.T. (1994, Vt) 641 A2d

§ 746 Intoxication

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

A confession is not involuntary and inadmissible merely because the accused was intoxicated; 78 proof that one who has confessed was intoxicated at the time of the confession generally goes to the weight and credibility accorded to the confession, but does not require that the confession be excluded from evidence. 79 The test is whether, by reason of the intoxication, the defendant's "will was overborne" or whether the statements were the "product of a rational intellect and a free will," 80 and, in this regard, in some instances courts have found, based on the particular facts involved, that an accused was so intoxicated at the time of the confession that the confession was rendered inadmissible because the confession could not be said to be the product of a rational and a free will. 81 For example, the accused may be so intoxicated that he could not understand the Miranda warnings given to him and thus could not waive them as a product of a rational intellect and a free will. 82

In some jurisdictions the rule is that intoxication will not, by itself, render a confession involuntary and thus inadmissible unless the accused was intoxicated to the extent that he was unable to understand the meaning of his words, 83 or, as it is sometimes put, was in a state of "mania" 84 —variously described as such an impairment of the mind or will as would make him unconscious of the meaning of his words, 85 or as involving a situation where the accused was so intoxicated or influenced that he was unable to appreciate the consequences and nature of his statements. 86

◆ Practice guide: Whether intoxication exists and is of a degree sufficient to vitiate the voluntariness of a confession are questions of fact and a trial judge's conclusion on this issue will not be disturbed unless unsupported by the evidence. 87

§ 746 ----Intoxication [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

In rape prosecution, trial court did not err in refusing to suppress incriminating statement on grounds that defendant was intoxicated at time where, although defendant smelled of alcohol, defendant was able to acknowledge his understanding of each Miranda right, read waiver statement, and requested court-appointed counsel (after which interview was terminated, but then reopened on defendant's initiative). Midgett v State (1994) 316 Ark 553, 873 SW2d 165.

Statements were properly admitted in prosecution for reckless manslaughter, although defendant was very intoxicated and had blood alcohol between 0.23 and 0.25, where he was capable of communicating and was responsive in answering questions such as his name and age, indicating he knowingly and intelligently waived right to silence. State v Warmbrun (1994, App Div) 277 NJ Super 51, 648 A2d 1153.

There was no merit to defendant's contention that he was intoxicated and mentally impaired at the time he made an inculpatory statement and that officers engaged in coercive tactics by repeatedly telling defendant during interrogation that he failed the polygraph test, since officers had spoken to defendant prior to the date of his confession and noticed nothing out of the ordinary on the day he confessed; the only evidence of alcohol consumption was defendant's drinking from a beer can which was half-empty, when taken from defendant; and after defendant was informed that he failed the polygraph examination, he said nothing inculpatory and continued to deny any involvement in the crime. State v Thibodeaux (1995) 341 NC 53, 459 SE2d 501.

In prosecution of defendant for conspiracy and murder of wife, confession was properly admitted, even though defendant alleged he was intoxicated when he waived rights, where agent testified defendant was nervous and upset, but rational, and that defendant cried at least twice, but agent observed nothing to indicate defendant was drunk or heavily under influence of alcohol, and jailer testified he saw nothing leading him to believe defendant was drunk, even though defendant said he had drunk most of bottle of whiskey, and parents testified he was drinking heavily, was crying, and was irrational, and that they told officers at sheriff's department when they brought him there that son was drunk and emotional. State v Stephenson (1994, Tenn) 878 SW2d 530, related proceeding (Tenn Crim) 1994 Tenn Crim App LEXIS 366 and reh den (Tenn) 1994 Tenn LEXIS 203.

Police officer's administering roadside sobriety test to defendant after stopping defendant's vehicle did not constitute interrogation. Raffaelli v State (1994, Tex App Texarkana) 881 SW2d 714, petition for discretionary review ref (Nov 30, 1994).

Marshall's statement that he believed accused understood what he was doing, in spite of his drunkenness, was insufficient to support finding of knowing advisement of Miranda rights and knowing waiver, so that admission of accused's incriminating statements was error requiring reversal in light of evidence that: accused had been discovered, "passed out" in his truck, it had taken marshall about two minutes to awaken him; accused had been unable to walk to patrol car without marshall's assistance; and breathalyzer test administered within forty-five minutes of encounter had registered .37%. Williams v State (Ind) 423 NE2d 598.

Where the free and voluntary nature of a confession is challenged on the ground that defendant was mentally incompetent due to intoxication at the time of the confession, such confession will be rendered inadmissible only when the intoxication is of such a degree as to negate defendant's comprehension and to render her unconscious of the consequences of what she is saying. State v Meredith (La) 400 So 2d 580.

Evidence of accused's drinking and intoxication was sufficient to raise legitimate jury issue as to voluntariness of confession where accused testified that he had been drinking continuously for two days prior to his arrest, that he could not remember what he and police officer discussed, and that his excessive drinking caused "blackout spells" which accounted for his inability to remember what occurred at police station. Dempsey v State, 277 Md 134, 355 A2d 455.

The fact that one is intoxicated at the time a confession is made does not necessarily render him incapable of comprehending the meaning and effect of his words. Therefore, proof that an accused was intoxicated at the time he made a confession does not render the statement inadmissible as a matter of law, unless the accused's intoxication was such that he did not realize what he was saying. Proof of intoxication, short of rendering the accused unconscious of what he is saying, goes to the weight and credibility to be accorded to the confession, but does not require that the confession be excluded from evidence. State v Saxon, 261 SC 523, 201 SE2d 114.

Intoxication to the extent of incoherence or "mania" is recognized as an exception to the general principle that proof of intoxication does not go to the admissibility of incriminating statements, but to their weight and credibility, and as grounds for exclusion on the basis of either involuntariness or unreliability. State v Youngbear (Iowa) 229 NW2d 728, cert den 423 US 1018, 46 L Ed 2d 390, 96 S Ct 455.

It is only when intoxication reaches the state in which one has hallucinations or begins to confabulate to compensate for his loss of memory for recent events' that the truth of what he says becomes strongly suspect. Loss of inhibitions and muscular coordination, impaired judgment, and subsequent amnesia do not necessarily (if at all) indicate that an intoxicated person did not know what he was saying when he said it. "In vino veritas" is an expression that did not originate in fancy. If the court accepts the confessions of the stupid, there is no reason not to accept those of the drunk. Britt v Commonwealth (Ky) 512 SW2d 496.

Where record clearly showed that accused was in an acute, rampant state of intoxication equivalent to mania, such that, in his deranged and psychotic mental imbalance accused could not have rationally, voluntarily and intentionally waived his constitutional rights, trial judge did not abuse his discretion in excluding oral confession made by accused to judge. State v Williams (Miss) 208 So 2d 172.

§ 747 Use of drugs and narcotics

Although a confession is not inadmissible merely because the accused was under the influence of drugs or narcotics, it is a factor 88 which may properly be considered. 89

The general standard that if an individual's will was overborne or if his confession was not the product of a rational intellect and a free will, his confession is inadmissible because coerced, 90 is applicable to a drug-induced statement. 91 It is difficult to imagine a situation in which a confession would be less the product of a free intellect, less voluntary, than when brought about by a drug having the effect of a "truth serum." 92

◆ Observation: When the interrogating officers reasonably should have known that a suspect is under the influence of drugs or alcohol, 93 a lesser quantum of coercion may be sufficient to call into question the voluntariness of the confession. 94

§ 747 ----Use of drugs and narcotics [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

In prosecution for growing marijuana, trial court properly determined that incriminating statements given by defendant to police officers following his arrest were voluntarily and understandingly made, despite fact that defendant had allegedly used cocaine throughout weekend preceeding arrest, where witnesses had testified that defendant appeared alert, lucid, and normal at time of his arrest, his speech was neither slurred nor unusual, and his appearance was normal. United States v Benish (1992, WD Pa) 782 F Supp 35.

Incriminating statements that defendant made to police after his arrest were not subject to suppression, despite his claim that he was suffering from cocaine intoxication at time he waived his Miranda rights and made statements. Government sustained its burden of proving both voluntariness and reliability of defendant's statements where defendant was attorney who appeared to be intelligent man, and where, although defendant had cocaine dependency and his actions in videotape made by police approximately 45 minutes before he was interviewed suggested that he was under influence of something, most probably cocaine, he nonetheless demonstrated complete coherence. United States v Diggs (1992, DC Kan) 801 F Supp 441.

The evidence supported the conclusion that the defendant's confession to murder and assault was voluntary, notwithstanding the defendant's contention that he still suffered from the effect of pills he ingested before admitting himself to the hospital, where (1) after learning that the defendant was at a hospital, officers spoke with a physician, who stated that the defendant could be discharged and that there was no reason to keep him hospitalized, (2) the officers then approached the defendant and stated that he was wanted for questioning in connection with crimes at issue, (3) the officers stated that the defendant did not appear to be under the influence of alcohol or drugs, (4) the defendant agreed to accompany the officers to police headquarters and was taken there without being handcuffed, (5) the defendant was interviewed about 1 1/2 hours later, and the interviewing officer stated that the defendant did not show signs of being under any sort of mind altering substance during the interview, (6) the defendant stated that he had taken about 20 pills in an attempt at suicide, but that the pills only made him sick to his stomach, and (7) during the interview in which he confessed, the defendant stated only that he felt pretty miserable for what he did. Commonwealth v Walker (1995, Pa) 656 A2d 90, petition for certiorari filed (Jun 20, 1995).

Statements made by defendant charged with aggravated rape were properly admitted where, although defendant claimed that he was under influence of crack cocaine at time he waived Miranda rights, police testimony indicated that defendant appeared to be physically normal, responded appropriately to all questions, and appeared to know what he was doing. State v Barker (1993, La App 2d Cir) 628 So 2d 168, cert den (La) 1994 La LEXIS 804.

A confession was held involuntary, where the defendant, who was in the prison hospital with a bullet wound in the leg, signed the confession after a morphine injection when he was in a "kind of slumber," feverish, and in intense pain. Beecher v Alabama, 389 US 35, 19 L Ed 2d 35, 88 S Ct 189.

Where the defendant never told his questioners that he felt too ill or groggy to answer questions, and where, despite the pain and the drugs, he not only conversed intelligently with his questioners but also tried to negotiate for advantages should he cooperate, it was concluded that the defendant's pain was not so great nor his mind so clouded by pain pills that he was unable to think and converse with the police freely and intelligently on several subjects. United States v Short (CA10 Utah) 947 F2d 1445, 34 Fed Rules Evid Serv 326, cert den (US) 118 L Ed 2d 397, 112 S Ct 1680.

Valium did not render the defendant's statement involuntary, where there was no showing that her mind was substantially impaired when she made the statement. Cross v State (Ala App) 536 So 2d 155.

In a prosecution for robbery, the defendant's custodial statement was properly admitted, although the detective taking the statement testified that the defendant appeared to pass out while in custody, where the statement indicated only that the defendant was under the influence of drugs at the time of the robbery, rather than at the time of giving the statement, and where, even if the defendant was under the influence of drugs while giving the statement, it was nonetheless admissible as the product of his rational intellect and free will. Johnson v State, 195 Ga App 56, 392 SE2d 280, cert den (Ga) 1990 Ga LEXIS 832.

The ingestion of 50 Percodan tablets by a heroin addict sometime prior to the police interrogation did not render his statements inadmissible in a subsequent robbery prosecution, where all the people who had contact with the defendant at time of the interrogation testified that he was lucid and rational. State v Ashe (Me) 425 A2d 191.

The defendant's confession was voluntary, although he showed signs of drug withdrawal during the interrogation, where he remained lucid and cooperative and seemed to understand the nature of the proceedings, and where he was alert enough to first deny the crime and then to bargain after seeing the incriminating evidence. People v Monzon (2d Dept) 167 App Div 2d 357, 561 NYS2d 494.

Annotation: Sufficiency of showing that voluntariness of confession or admission was affected by alcohol or other drugs, 25 ALR4th 419.

§ 748 Warnings of constitutional rights

Even when Miranda warnings are not required, 95 proof of whether some kind of warnings of the defendant's constitutional rights were given is relevant evidence on the issue of whether the questioning was in fact coercive. 96

The fact that a defendant was not advised of his right to remain silent or of his right respecting counsel at the outset of interrogation, as required by Miranda, is a significant factor in considering the voluntariness of statements later made. Davis v North Carolina, 384 US 737, 16 L Ed 2d 895, 86 S Ct 1761 (interrogation of defendant predated Miranda decision).

4. Other Matters Affecting Admissibility; Constitutional Rights [749-753]

§ 749 Generally; Fifth Amendment rights; Miranda warnings

The admissibility of confessions and other types of admissions 97 is affected by numerous United States Supreme Court cases. In the landmark case of Miranda v Arizona 98 the Supreme Court held that the prosecution may not use statements, whether exculpatory or inculpatory, stemming from the custodial interrogation of a defendant unless it demonstrates the use of procedural safeguards to secure the privilege against self-incrimination. 99 More specifically, as an absolute constitutional prerequisite to the admissibility of a confession or other incriminatory statement, the suspect must—in the absence of a clear, voluntary, knowing, and intelligent waiver of the constitutional rights involved 1 —be warned prior to questioning that he has a right to remain silent, that any statement he does make may be used as evidence against him, and that he has a right to the presence of an attorney, and that if he cannot afford an attorney, one will be appointed for him prior to any question, if he so desires. 2 Each of the specified four warnings must be given. 3 Such warnings and waiver are not sufficiently demonstrated by a statement in the confession that the confession was voluntarily made by the accused with full knowledge of his legal rights and with the understanding that any statement made by him might be used against him. 4

The duty of police to inform a suspect of his rights under the privilege against self-incrimination and the corresponding right of the suspect to be informed, attaches when "custodial interrogation" begins. "Custodial interrogation" has been defined as questioning initiated by law enforcement officers after a person has been taken into custody or otherwise deprived of his freedom of action in any significant way. 5

An effective advising of Miranda rights does not require an oral recitation, but presentation to a defendant of a written form which adequately lists his rights is sufficient. 6 The Miranda warnings need not be a virtual incantation of the precise language contained in the Miranda opinion; 7 the inquiry is simply whether the warnings reasonably convey to a suspect his rights as required by Miranda. 8

Under the Edwards bright-line rule, an accused, having expressed his desire to deal with the police only through counsel, is not subject to further interrogation by the authorities until counsel has been made available to him, unless, the accused himself initiates further communication, exchanges, or conversations with the police. 9

The admissibility of statements obtained after the person in custody has decided to remain silent depends under Miranda on whether his right to cut off questioning was scrupulously honored. 10

◆ Caution: When a defendant seeks to terminate an interrogation, the police must at a minimum give fresh Miranda warnings before recommencing questioning, and any statement made prior to the new warnings must be suppressed. 11

A second questioning is not rendered unconstitutional simply because it involved the same subject matter discussed during the first questioning. As long as new Miranda warnings are given to the person and the person's initial request to remain silent is scrupulously honored, statements from subsequent interrogations on the same subject are admissible. 12

A suspect who has once responded to unwarned yet uncoerced questioning is not thereby disabled from waiving his rights and confessing after he has been given the requisite Miranda warnings. 13

A narrow public safety exception has been recognized to the requirement that Miranda warnings be given before a suspect's answers may be admitted into evidence has been recognized in a situation where police officers ask questions reasonably prompted by a concern for the public safety, and the need for answers to questions in a situation posing a threat to the public safety outweighs the need for Miranda's prophylactic rule protecting the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination. The motivation of the officer involved in such instances is irrelevant. 14 An exception to Miranda has also been recognized under the so-called "rescue doctrine," a particular species of exigent circumstances, under which, where the interrogation of a suspect is undertaken by the police for the paramount reason that information is being sought to save a life, the interrogating officers are justified in not impeding their rescue efforts by informing the defendant of his rights to remain silent and to the assistance of counsel. 15

General on-the-scene questioning as to the facts surrounding a crime or other general questioning of citizens in the fact-finding process is not affected by Miranda. 16 Similarly, the admissibility of volunteered statements of any kind is not affected by Miranda. 17

Voluntary, uncoerced statements obtained in violation of Miranda, although inadmissible to establish the prosecution's case in chief, may be used for impeachment, when their trustworthiness satisfies legal standards. 18 The jury, nevertheless, must be informed as to the restricted and limited purpose for which such statements may be considered. 19

Violations of Miranda and Edwards are subject to the harmless error rule. 20

§ 749 ----Generally; Fifth Amendment rights; Miranda warnings [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

For purposes of the assessment whether a person being interrogated by a police officer was in custody and thus entitled to Miranda warnings as to the right to counsel and as to the privilege against self-incrimination, the officer's views concerning the nature of the interrogation, or beliefs concerning the potential culpability of the interrogatee, may be one among many relevant factors, but only if the officer's views or beliefs were somehow manifested by words or deeds to the interrogatee and would have affected how a reasonable person in the interrogatee's position would perceive his or her freedom to leave; even a clear statement from an officer that an interrogatee is a prime criminal suspect is not, in itself, dispositive of the custody issue, for some suspects are free to come and go until the police decide to make an arrest; the weight and pertinence of any communications regarding the officer's degree of suspicion will depend upon the facts and circumstances of the particular case. Stansbury v California (US) 128 L Ed 2d 293, 114 S Ct 1526.

A law enforcement officer's subjective and undisclosed view concerning whether a person being interrogated by law enforcement officers is a criminal suspect is irrelevant to the assessment whether the interrogatee is in custody and thus entitled to Miranda warnings as to the right to counsel and as to the privilege against self-incrimination, because the initial determination as to the custody issue depends on the objective circumstances of the interrogation, not on the views harbored by either the interrogating officers or the interrogatee, where under Miranda (1) a police officer's unarticulated plan has no bearing on the question whether a suspect was in custody at a particular time, (2) the only relevant inquiry is how a reasonable person in the suspect's shoes would have understood the situation, and (3) save as they are communicated or otherwise manifested to the interrogatee, an officer's evolving but unarticulated suspicions do not affect the objective circumstances of an interrogation or interview, as one cannot expect the interrogatee to probe the officer's innermost thoughts. Stansbury v California (US) 128 L Ed 2d 293, 114 S Ct 1526.

A law enforcement officer's obligation to administer Miranda warnings—as to the right to counsel and as to the privilege against self-incrimination—attaches only where there has been such a restriction on a person's freedom as to render the person in custody; in determining whether an individual was in custody, a court must examine all the circumstances surrounding an interrogation, but the ultimate inquiry is simply whether there was a formal arrest or restraint on freedom of movement of the degree associated with a formal arrest. Stansbury v California (US) 128 L Ed 2d 293, 114 S Ct 1526.

The applicability of the rigid prophylactic rule of Edwards v Arizona (1981) 451 US 477, 68 L Ed 2d 378, 101 S Ct 1880—to the effect that law enforcement officers must immediately cease questioning a suspect who, having received the Miranda warnings and having waived the rights to remain silent and to have counsel present during custodial interrogation, later clearly asserts the Miranda right to counsel—requires courts to determine whether an accused actually invoked the right to counsel; to avoid difficulty and to provide guidance to officers conducting interrogations, this is an objective inquiry; invocation of the Miranda right to counsel requires, at a minimum, some statement that can reasonably be construed to be an expression of desire for the assistance of an attorney; if a suspect makes a reference to an attorney that is ambiguous or equivocal, in that a reasonable officer in light of the circumstances would have understood only that the suspect might be invoking the right to counsel, then questioning is not required to cease, and therefore, after a knowing and voluntary waiver of the Miranda rights, law enforcement officers may continue questioning until and unless the suspect clearly requests an attorney, for (1) requiring immediate cessation of questioning when officers reasonably do not know whether a suspect wants a lawyer would (a) transform the Miranda safeguards into wholly irrational obstacles to legitimate police investigative activity, and (b) unduly hamper effective law enforcement, (2) while the requirement of a clear assertion may disadvantage some suspects, the primary protection afforded them is the Miranda warnings themselves, and (3) the United States Supreme Court is unwilling to add a third layer of prophylaxis to the Edwards rule, which prophylactically protects the Miranda right to counsel, which right in turn prophylactically protects the Federal Constitution's Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination. (Souter, Blackmun, Stevens, and Ginsburg, JJ., dissented in part from this holding.) Davis v United States (US) 129 L Ed 2d 362, 114 S Ct 2351.

If a suspect, after receiving the Miranda warnings, effectively waives the Miranda right to have counsel present during custodial interrogation, then law enforcement officers are free to question the suspect; however, under the rule of Edwards v Arizona (1981) 451 US 477, 68 L Ed 2d 378, 101 S Ct 1880, if the suspect requests counsel at any time during the interview, then the suspect is not subject to further questioning until a lawyer has been made available or the suspect reinitiates conversation; this second layer of prophylaxis for the Miranda right to counsel (1) is designed to prevent police from badgering a suspect into waiving previously asserted Miranda rights, (2) like other aspects of Miranda, is not itself required by the Federal Constitution's Fifth Amendment prohibition on coerced confessions, and (3) is instead justified only by reference to its prophylactic purpose. Davis v United States (US) 129 L Ed 2d 362, 114 S Ct 2351.

Defendant who came freely to court to testify on behalf of codefendants was not entitled to Miranda warnings prior to his testimony since he was neither in custody nor subject to official interrogation when he testified. United States v Valdez (1994, CA2 NY) 16 F3d 1324, petition for certiorari filed (May 13, 1994).

Defendant's counsel's filing of Immigration and Naturalization Service form entitled "Notice of Entry of Appearance as Attorney or Representative" did not amount to invocation by defendant of his right not to respond to custodial interrogation outside presence of counsel so as to render defendant's statements inadmissible, since form indicated only defendant's consent to disclosure to counsel of any record in INS recording system. United States v Thompson (1994, CA2 NY) 35 F3d 100.

Defendant's Fifth Amendment protection did not apply to his conversations with government informant where at time of conversations defendant was neither in police custody nor subjected to interrogation, was unaware of criminal investigation against him, and was unaware that informant was cooperating with government. United States v Holmes (1995, CA2 NY) 44 F3d 1150.

Murder suspect who, during custodial interrogation and after given Miranda warnings, asked police detective "Do you think I need a lawyer?" and then made incriminating statements did not make clear statement invoking Miranda right to have counsel present, and subsequent inculpatory statements were admissible. Diaz v Senkowski (1996, CA2 NY) 76 F3d 61.

Narcotics defendant's silence as to two questions while answering others during custodial interrogation did not constitute even equivocal invocation of his right to remain silent where defendant was given Miranda warnings twice and on each occasion acknowledged his understanding and agreed to speak with police officers. United States v Ramirez (1996, CA2 NY) 79 F3d 298.

Failure to provide Miranda warning does not warrant federal habeas relief for convicted robber, where police confronted with robbery in progress at social club involving holding of hostages identified robber as perpetrator and immediately garnered from him information that there were 2 more men that were with him inside club, because uncoerced obtaining of this information at once was urgently necessary for immediate public safety even though also potentially indicative of guilt. Howard v Garvin (1994, SD NY) 844 F Supp 173.

Drug defendant's incriminating statements made to federal agents in district attorney's office without Miranda warnings at meeting which defendant understood to be off-the-record proffer as to possible assistance defendant could give to state authorities were made involuntarily and were, therefore, inadmissible. United States v Swint (1994, CA3 Pa) 15 F3d 286.

Juvenile was not deprived of his right against self-incrimination by failure to administer Miranda warnings prior to psychiatric evaluations used in adult certification hearing, since use of evaluations at transfer hearing did not incriminate him. United States v A.R. (1994, CA3 Pa) 38 F3d 699.

Admission of defendant's answer to FBI agent's questions stating that there was weapon present in his apartment, which answer was made after Miranda warnings were given and after defendant claimed right to counsel, violated defendant's right against self-incrimination but was harmless error where defendant was sole occupant of apartment where gun was found, since public safety exception did not apply. United States v Mobley (1994, CA4 Va) 40 F3d 688.

Government's use of defendant's prior inconsistent nonverbal statements to government agent, obtained in violation of Miranda, to impeach defendant's testimony on direct examination was permissible since they were no longer protected by Miranda's shield and government was free to use agent's testimony for limited purpose of impeaching defendant's credibility. United States v Gullett (1996, CA4 W Va) 75 F3d 941.

Defendant who voluntarily appeared at police station where he gave statement to police officer and then left station of his own accord was not in custody so as to require Miranda warnings. United States v Brown (1993, CA5 Miss) 7 F3d 1155.

Narcotics defendant's confession was voluntary despite defendant's claim that he confessed because he saw co-defendant being beaten by task force officer of Drug Enforcement Agency, where there was evidence that defendant knowingly and voluntarily waived his Miranda rights when told that codefendant had confessed and that there were advantages in cooperation. United States v Ornelas- Rodriguez (1994, CA5 Tex) 12 F3d 1339, reh den (CA5 Tex) 1994 US App LEXIS 3490.

Defendant knowingly and intelligently waived his Miranda rights despite his contention that he was drunk when interrogated by federal agents following his arrest for drunk driving where agents testified that they gave defendant enough time to recover from his inebriation and that he did not appear drunk when they interviewed him. United States v Andrews (1994, CA5 Miss) 22 F3d 1328.

Seizure of cocaine from defendant airline passenger's suitcase after his arrest was not tainted nor was his voluntary abandonment of suitcase tainted by police officers' failure to give him Miranda warnings at time he was escorted from plane where there was probable cause to arrest him. United States v Mendez (1994, CA5 Tex) 27 F3d 126.

Defendant properly waived his Miranda rights where, after refusing to sign waiver-of-rights form, and after agent told him that he did not have to talk to him but could if he wanted to, defendant responded "Okay" and confessed, thus rendering his confession admissible. United States v Collins (1994, CA5 Tex) 40 F3d 95, reh den (1995, CA5 Tex) 1995 US App LEXIS 1567.

Federal agent who arrested defendant on robbery charges and gave him Miranda warnings did not violate defendant's Fifth Amendment right to counsel during custodial interrogation, where defendant orally waived such right, and where his Sixth Amendment right to counsel on state charges was insufficient to invoke his Fifth Amendment right on federal charges. United States v Laury (1995, CA5 Tex) 49 F3d 145.

Defendant was not in custody for Miranda purposes during roadside detention after which defendant simply followed sheriff in his own truck to border patrol station and was not transported there in sheriff's vehicle, since reasonable person would not have believed that his freedom of movement was sufficiently restrained. United States v Garcia (1996, CA5 Tex) 77 F3d 857.

Narcotics defendant's rights were not violated by failure to give Miranda warnings when during search of his residence he was interrogated for less than fifteen minutes in presence of other family members, since in view of brief detention and location of questioning he was not subjected to custodial interrogation. United States v Douglas (1996, CA5 Tex) 82 F3d 1315.

Defendant voluntarily and intelligently waived her Miranda rights to remain silent where she had been advised of her rights at least twice, signed a written waiver and later reaffirmed waiver after she initiated post-arraignment conversation with federal agents in which she made incriminating admissions. United States v Mills (1993, CA6 Ky) 1 F3d 414.

Defendant postal worker's rights under Fifth and Sixth Amendments were not violated by admission into evidence of his answer to postal inspector's question as to defendant's telephone number during post-arrest interview and before Miranda warnings had been given, since question fell within "routine booking question" exception to Miranda requirements. United States v Broadus (1993, CA6 Mich) 7 F3d 460.

Defendant's statements as to his income tax evasion and money laundering schemes made to Internal Revenue Service agents during noncustodial interview without prior Miranda warnings were admissible, even though failure to give such warnings violated IRS procedure. United States v Bencs (1994, CA6 Ohio) 28 F3d 555, 94-2 USTC ¶ 50347, 94 TNT 140-15, 1994 FED App 231P.

Evidence supported finding that police officers' question of defendant was noncustodial and that Miranda warnings were therefore unnecessary, even though questioning took place at county sheriff's department and lasted 90 minutes, where defendant himself chose place of questioning over other possibilities, and questioning occurred in squad room rather than in cramped interrogation room. United States v Betts (1994, CA7 Ill) 16 F3d 748, 38 Fed Rules Evid Serv 1070.

Drug defendant's questioning by police was noncustodial interrogation not requiring Miranda warnings where defendant voluntarily accompanied police officer from his home to sheriff's department, questioning there occurred in public squad room and lasted 90 minutes during which time defendant was permitted to smoke, and there was no restraint on his freedom. United States v Betts (1994, CA7 Ill) 16 F3d 748, 38 Fed Rules Evid Serv 1070.

Government's closing argument in narcotics prosecution stating that defendant's post-Miranda silence was "consistent" with behavior of confederate in crime violated defendant's privilege against self-incrimination since it was impermissible invitation to draw inference of guilt, as opposed to commentary on defendant's credibility, but comment was harmless given extent of other evidence. United States v Gant (1994, CA7 Ill) 17 F3d 935.

Murder defendant's statement, during police interrogation, that "I can't afford a lawyer but is there anyway I can get one?", on its face, was not "clear request" for counsel, after which all interrogation should have ceased, where defendant had already confessed and agreed to assist police in searching for murder weapon, had been twice informed of his Miranda rights, and executed written waiver of those rights on both occasions. Lord v Duckworth (1994, CA7 Ind) 29 F3d 1216.

Defendant was not "in custody" for purposes of Miranda when he was questioned by police regarding arson in which two of his children died, where he had been incarcerated following revocation of his probation for unrelated crime, he voluntarily appeared at interview, room was well lit and unlocked, and he was told he was free to leave, since there was no added imposition on his freedom of movement nor any measure of compulsion beyond his imprisonment. United States v Menzer (1994, CA7 Wis) 29 F3d 1223.

Defendant who was detained for less than 10 minutes during execution of search warrant of her hotel room was not in custody for purposes of Miranda, where she was not handcuffed or physically restrained in any way, only two law enforcement officers conducted search, they did not brandish weapons, and they limited their questioning in scope and duration. United States v Burns (1994, CA7 Wis) 37 F3d 276.

Defendant who was questioned by FBI agents while in hospital after he was in coma following automobile accident was not "in custody" where FBI agent did not intend to place defendant in custody at time of interview and defendant was free to check himself out of hospital. United States v Robertson (1994, CA10 Kan) 19 F3d 1318.

Defendant's remark, "I don't got nothing to say," while refusing to sign waiver of rights form presented to him in back of squad car after his arrest did not amount to clear assertion of his right to remain silent but was merely angry response to waiver form in front of him, so that his subsequent interview in which he made incriminating statements was not in violation of Miranda. United States v Banks (1996, CA7 Ill) 78 F3d 1190, reh, en banc, den (1996, CA7 Ill) 1996 US App LEXIS 11365.

Suspect was "in custody" during interrogation for purposes of Miranda warnings when he was prevented from leaving during three- hour search of his house by armed officer assigned to guard him, despite familiarity of surroundings and presence of his mother. Sprosty v Buchler (1996, CA7 Wis) 79 F3d 635.

Evidence that drug defendant expressly stated he understood his Miranda rights, that he never requested an attorney at any time during questioning or asked that questioning be stopped and that defendant was very cooperative throughout entire incident supported finding that defendant voluntarily waived his right to have counsel present during custodial interrogation. United States v Barahona (1993, CA8 Mo) 990 F2d 412.

Fourth and Fifth Amendments did not apply when bank security officer and corporate auditor obtained confession from defendant that she had embezzled bank funds since they were private actors not acting as instruments of state, where government regulation merely directed bank to assist in apprehending any person committing crimes against bank. United States v Garlock (1994, CA8 Iowa) 19 F3d 441.

Miranda warning was not necessary under "public safety" exception when drug defendant, in answer to police officer's questions whether he had any drugs or needles on his person, answered "I don't use drugs, I sell them" since question represented objectively reasonable attempt to ensure officer's personal safety from immediate danger from contact with syringes and toxic substances. United States v Carrillo (1994, CA9 Nev) 16 F3d 1046, 94 CDOS 1212, 94 Daily Journal DAR 2133.

Government agent's statement to arrestee that large quantity of cocaine had been seized and that arrestee was in serious trouble, made after arrestee had received Miranda warnings and had invoked his right to remain silent, did not constitute interrogation since statements were not express questions and did not call for incriminating response. United States v Moreno-Flores (1994, CA9 Ariz) 33 F3d 1164, 94 CDOS 6649, 94 Daily Journal DAR 12274.

By executing written acknowledgment that he understood his Miranda rights, by refusing to sign waiver form, and by stating that his attorney did not want him to speak to officials, defendant properly invoked his right to have his counsel present during custodial interrogation. United States v Cheely (1994, CA9 Alaska) 36 F3d 1439, 94 Daily Journal DAR 13898.

Drug defendant's statements to police officer were involuntary in absence of prior Miranda warnings where statements were made after he had been stopped while driving to shed containing marijuana and weapons, was forced out of his automobile at gun point and was forced to lay on ground. United States v Perdue (1993, CA10 Kan) 8 F3d 1455.

Drug defendant's privilege against self-incrimination was not violated by statements made at presentence interview where interview was not coercive since routine presentence interviews do not require Miranda warnings even if defendant is in custody and faces serious punishment. United States v Washington (1993, CA10 Kan) 11 F3d 1510, petition for certiorari filed (Jan 18, 1994).

Defendant was not "in custody" when he was detained inside living room of his house while FBI agents conducted search of house pursuant to valid warrant and thus could question him without giving requisite Miranda warnings; agents never held him at gunpoint, handcuffed him, or otherwise used force or threat of force. United States v Ritchie (1994, CA10 Colo) 35 F3d 1477.

Police officer's request to search defendant's automobile did not constitute interrogation under Miranda and officer may, following voluntary consent to search, search vehicle without first apprising automobile owner of his rights under Miranda. United States v McCurdy (1994, CA10 NM) 40 F3d 1111.

Nine year old boy who was interviewed in school principal's office by case worker about suspected sexual abuse committed by him was not in custody for Miranda purposes where interview involved none of characteristics of arrest or compulsion, although child believed that he could not leave principal's office. Doe v Bagan (1994, CA10 Colo) 41 F3d 571.

Admission of fingerprint card containing suspect's signature did not require prior Miranda warnings since signature was merely part of identification process and was not testimonial in nature or information elicited as part of custodial interrogation. United States v Snow (1996, CA10 Wyo) 82 F3d 935.

Motorists stopped for speeding did not have right to Miranda warnings while officer conducted cursory search of vehicle, where officer only asked general questions such as who owned which piece of luggage and whether motorists had key to glove compartment of rented car, since motorists were not thus subjected to custodial interrogation. United States v McKneely (1993, DC Utah) 810 F Supp 1537.

Defendant was "in custody" for Miranda purposes when making incriminating statement where customs agents prevented airplane in which defendant was passenger from moving, forced defendant to lie on his stomach at gunpoint while searching plane and took possession of his suitcase and plane ticket. United States v Adams (1993, CA11 Fla) 1 F3d 1566, 7 FLW Fed C 819.

Statement by murder suspect after being told that police had evidence against him, that "if you got that against me, you might as well get me a lawyer," constituted unequivocal request for counsel, rendering confession obtained by subsequent questioning without lawyer present inadmissible under Miranda. Craig v Singletary (1996, CA11 Fla) 80 F3d 1509, 9 FLW Fed C 1041.

Defendant in murder prosecution was not in custody at time of making incriminating statement to police officer where defendant was in hospital at the time and had not been arrested; detention or restriction of movement of hospital patient-suspect must rise to level of de facto arrest before person is deemed "in custody" for Miranda purposes. Nelson v State (1993, Ala App) 623 So 2d 432, reh den, without op (Ala App) 1993 Ala Crim App LEXIS 1179 and cert den, without op (Ala) 1993 Ala LEXIS 1009.

Defendant's initial remark during interview with police officers regarding his mother's securing "high price" lawyer constituted mere bragging about his ability to secure high-priced legal representation for future proceedings, and was not request to consult with attorney during interrogation, and this interpretation was reinforced by his refusal or inability to give interrogating officer name of his lawyer. Moreover, defendant's second remark, "Maybe I ought to talk to a lawyer," which was followed by police officer's inquiry as to whether defendant wanted attorney and by defendant's subsequent request, "Tell me what you have and I might make you a proposition," did not constitute invocation of right to counsel in light of whole record, including defendant's overall conduct and demeanor during interrogation, ambiguous and tentative nature of his reference to attorney, police officer's immediate attempt to clarify defendant's remark, and defendant's refusal to respond thereto. People v Johnson (1993) 6 Cal 4th 1, 23 Cal Rptr 2d 593, 859 P2d 673, 93 CDOS 7745, 93 Daily Journal DAR 13149, reh den (Jan 12, 1994) and habeas corpus den (Cal) 1994 Cal LEXIS 18.

Molestation defendant was not custodially interrogated when he made incriminating statements to eight-year-old victim over telephone in recorded call set up by police with cooperation of victim and defendant's grandmother, since Miranda rule exists to deter use of official intimidation tactics and does not apply to statements made in apparent confidence to others than police. People v Plyler (1993, 1st Dist) 18 Cal App 4th 535, 22 Cal Rptr 2d 772, 93 CDOS 6592, 93 Daily Journal DAR 11235, review den People v Plyler (1993, Cal) 1993 Cal LEXIS 6285.

Detention of defendant for over hour in customs office at Mexican border did not constitute custodial interrogation, since defendant was detained in public area of office, and length of detention was due to wait for police officer to arrive so that officer could investigate possibility of defendant's intoxication while driving. People v Forster (1994, 4th Dist) 29 Cal App 4th 1746, 35 Cal Rptr 2d 705, 94 CDOS 8610, 94 Daily Journal DAR 15928.

Interrogation of defendant, charged with theft of computer from employer, was custodial where (1) interrogation was held at place of employment, (2) police officers repeatedly accused defendant of lying, and said that defendant should not make things worse by lying, that he would fail polygraph test, and that he looked and acted overly nervous, and (3) defendant was never informed that he was free to leave or was not in official custody. People v LaFrankie (1993, Colo) 858 P2d 702, petition for certiorari filed (Dec 28, 1993).

Defendant's request to speak with attorney was not ambiguous or equivocal, and statements he made to police officers thereafter were properly suppressed, where defendant was arrested, but police did not inform him of nature of charges other than to say he was being held regarding alleged sexual assault, where police advised defendant of his Miranda rights and he invoked his Miranda rights, requested attorney, and stated that he wished to discuss prior polygraph test with attorney, apparently under mistaken belief that investigation related to incident nearly 20 years earlier for which he had taken polygraph test, where police officer, who knew about prior incident, explained to defendant that they were not investigating that incident and that defendant did not need to discuss it with attorney because statute of limitations had expired, and where, although officers did not specify topic of pending investigation, officer again asked defendant if he wanted attorney and whether he would answer some questions, and defendant finally agreed to waive his right to have attorney present. Moreover, even if defendant's request was ambiguous, subsequent statements by interviewing officers failed to meet limited inquiry test, that is, limited inquiry designed to clarify ambiguous statement or accused's wishes regarding presence of counsel. People v Kleber (1993, Colo) 859 P2d 1361.

Trial court in prosecution for cultivation and possession of marijuana properly suppressed evidence seized at defendant's residence under consent given after defendant had been arrested, where defendant consented less than half-hour after arrest, before Miranda rights were explained, and in context of handcuffed custodial interrogation in which officers claimed inevitable discovery would result from eventual warrant. People v Breidenbach (1994, Colo) 875 P2d 879.

Defendant was not in custody when he made incriminating statements where defendant spoke to police officers on crowded street, was friendly and responsive, was not threatened or coerced by police, and allowed officers to use their flashlights to check his hands and clothing for signs of blood; record was devoid of evidence supporting conclusion that defendant had not been free to leave when he wanted to. State v Williams (1993) 227 Conn 101, 629 A2d 402.

In prosecution for operating motor vehicle while under influence of intoxicating liquor and assault with motor vehicle, defendant was not subjected to custodial interrogation requiring Miranda warnings, where, following automobile accident, state trooper questioned defendant at hospital emergency room, trooper did not restrain or order medical personnel to restrain defendant, trooper did not take advantage of inherently coercive situation created by ambulance attendants, trooper did not create police-dominated atmosphere, and trooper remained in view of witnesses who were not police officers, reducing likelihood that officer would use oppressive or abusive tactics. State v DesLaurier (1994) 230 Conn 572, 646 A2d 108.

Miranda warnings were not required to be given, where during defendant's trial for murder and robbery defendant initiated a conversation with bailiffs during which he admitted to taking part in the murders after bailiffs asked him who shot the victims, but he subsequently sought to suppress his statements on the ground that the bailiffs were law enforcement officers who wrongfully elicited the statements without first giving him Miranda warnings, because the bailiff's question was not asked as the result of circumstances in which mutually reinforcing pressures were present so as to weaken defendant's will. Christmas v State (1994, Fla) 632 So 2d 1368, 19 FLW S 35.

Bailiffs were law enforcement officers for purposes of determining whether Miranda warnings should have been given before questioning a defendant, where during defendant's prosecution for murder and robbery defendant engaged bailiffs in conversation during which he admitted to taking part in the murders, but he subsequently sought to suppress his statements on the ground that the bailiffs were law enforcement officers who wrongfully elicited the statements without first giving him Miranda warnings, while the state contended that the bailiffs were not law enforcement officers. Christmas v State (1994, Fla) 632 So 2d 1368, 19 FLW S 35.

Miranda warnings must be given whenever custodial interrogations take place owing to the coercive conditions that are inherent when suspects are questioned by captors, who appear to control the suspect's fate, and who may create mutually reinforcing pressures that the court has assumed will weaken the suspect's will. Christmas v State (1994, Fla) 632 So 2d 1368, 19 FLW S 35.

Custodial communications made by defendant to court-appointed mental health expert generally constitute custodial interrogation. Hittson v State (1994, Ga) 449 SE2d 586, 94 Fulton County D R 3588, and (Ga) 94 Fulton County D R 4001.

Defendant was not in custody for purposes of rule requiring Miranda warning, even though defendant was suspect, where defendant was interviewed in her home by sheriff; thus, statement made to officer was admissible in prosecution for child abuse. Carroll v State (1993) 208 Ga App 316, 430 SE2d 649, 93 Fulton County D R 1550, cert den (Ga) 1993 Ga LEXIS 872.

Where defendant arrested for armed robbery requested to speak to attorney after being advised of Miranda rights and attempted to reach attorney by telephone but received no answer, defendant's actions constituted clear and unambiguous request for counsel. People v Carlson (1992, 2d Dist) 224 Ill App 3d 1034, 167 Ill Dec 96, 586 NE2d 1368.

In murder prosecution, defendant's statement to police was involuntary and inadmissible on Fifth Amendment grounds, where interrogator misled defendant about meaning and consequences of "waiver" and such behavior by interrogator led to subsequent statement. Lynch v State (1994, Ind) 632 NE2d 341.

Defendant in murder prosecution, who was between 15 and 16 years of age at time of his arrest, made knowing and intelligent waiver of Miranda rights despite having verbal I.Q. of 70 and overall I.Q. of 80, where (1) there was no evidence that police officers ever threatened defendant, promised him anything, or told him he could go home if he gave them statement, (2) defendant never asked to see his attorney or his parents, and (3) defendant never appeared bewildered or unable to understand officers' questions. State v Rhomberg (1994, Iowa) 516 NW2d 803.

Inmate was entitled to Miranda rights where correctional officers escorted him in restraints to health-care unit and later to small office room nearby; inmate was handcuffed when he was in office, and was surrounded by several police officers and guards; inmate was taken to unused part of penitentiary, and correctional officer persisted in questioning him after inmate said on three occasions he did not want to talk; and fact that prison guard was interrogating did not insulate state from requirements of Miranda. State v Deases (1994, Iowa) 518 NW2d 784.

Defendant's questioning by his father, who was chief of police, at police station was not custodial interrogation, since defendant voluntarily accompanied father to station, defendant was not physically restrained, and interview lasted only 15 minutes, even though father employed his parental role in interview. State v Hince (1995, Minn) 540 NW2d 820.

Trial court in murder prosecution properly found that defendant was in custody from point at which he admitted strangling victim in attempt to render victim unconscious, where defendant had been removed from transit bus by officer and taken to police station, questioned for several hours without Miranda warnings, and could not reasonably have felt free to leave after admitting involvement in serious crime. State v Champion (1994, Minn App) 517 NW2d 350, review gr (Minn) 1994 Minn LEXIS 704.

Murder defendant's statement to police, after receiving Miranda warning and making incriminating statements, that he "ought to talk to an attorney" did not constitute unambiguous invocation of right to counsel. State v Parker (1994, Mo) 886 SW2d 908, petition for certiorari filed (Feb 21, 1995).

Murder suspect's conditional request for counsel, after he had been advised of his Miranda rights, that, "I ain't did nothing. If you think I did something, then I'm, I'm shutting up, and I want to see a lawyer, you know," did not constitute unambiguous invocation of right to counsel, and did not preclude police from continuing with their interrogation of suspect. It was evident that suspect elected proceed without counsel, his "condition subsequent" request notwithstanding. State v Figgins (1992, Mo App) 839 SW2d 630.

Statement made by defendant to paramedic in ambulance while riding to hospital was properly admitted in murder prosecution, where defendant was not in custody, was not being questioned, and paramedic was not acting on behalf of police officer in administering tests on defendant to determine whether defendant was feigning unconsciousness, and thus coercive aspects of custodial interrogation requiring Miranda warnings were not present. State v Middleton (1993, Mo App) 854 SW2d 504.

There was no merit to defendant's claim that he arguably invoked his right to counsel by signing "Miranda Warning & Waiver" form in two places, (1) on appropriate signature line to indicate waiver and (2) on appropriate signature line to confirm invocation of various Miranda rights, where defendant testified that he had signed form without reading it. State v Cooks (1993, Mo App) 861 SW2d 769.

Statement of defendant made before defendant was advised of his capital and Miranda rights was properly admitted in prosecution for receipt of stolen property, where defendant contacted police department and voluntarily made statements that were not in response to any questions asked by officer. State v Jaroma (1993) 137 NH 143, 625 A2d 1049.

Defendant's conversation with police officer in police vehicle, which occurred after officers arrived to execute search warrant at defendant's residence, was not custodial interrogation, since officer informed defendant that, after search of his person, he would be free to leave. State v Johnson (1995) 140 NH 573, 669 A2d 222.

Murder arrestee's comments regarding attorney were not request for counsel, where arrestee, after having been Mirandized and interviewed, referred to his representation by attorney in related civil matters against relatives of victim and indicated that he could not afford to pay lawyer. State v Cardona (1993, App Div) 268 NJ Super 38, 632 A2d 845.

Where, over 5 hours after defendant in murder prosecution was taken into custody, his blood alcohol level was almost four times higher than level at which person was presumed to be under influence of intoxicating liquor for driving purposes, trial court should have considered evidence of intoxication in determining whether defendant knowingly and intelligently waived Miranda rights before making incriminating statements to police; under circumstances presented, fact that defendant seemed to be speaking coherently and to have intellectual facilities fairly unimpaired was insufficient basis for finding of voluntariness. State v Young (1994, NM App) 875 P2d 1119, cert den (NM) 877 P2d 579 and cert den (NM) 877 P2d 579.

Prison inmate was entitled to new determination of facts as to whether questioning conducted by prison official within basement area of prison constituted "custodial interrogation" within meaning of Miranda rule where hearing court erroneously considered whether inmate was subjected to "inherently coercive" pressures, and court also made speculative factual assumption that official's "taking" of inmate to basement was somehow mutually agreed upon to obtain privacy; on de novo hearing, circumstances under which inmate was taken to basement for questioning should be fully explored, particularly in light of regulations requiring inmate to comply with directions of correction officer relating to movement within facility. People v Alls (1993) 83 NY2d 94, 608 NYS2d 139, 629 NE2d 1018, cert den (US) 128 L Ed 2d 474.

Harmless error rule would not apply to statements made by prison inmate who was questioned in isolated area of prison without being given Miranda warnings, and thus his assault conviction would not be affirmed, where jury acquitted him of sodomy charge, which made it readily inferable that jury did not fully credit complaining witness' testimony and that it was influenced by inmate's admissions solely to having committed assault. People v Alls (1993) 83 NY2d 94, 608 NYS2d 139, 629 NE2d 1018, cert den (US) 128 L Ed 2d 474.

Application of Miranda rule for prison inmate interrogations is not limited to those instances where circumstances of case show "danger" of coercion from "the interaction of custody and official interrogation" since such test requires fact-intensive, individualized inquiry as to whether particular prisoner interrogation was conducted in coercive manner, or whether questioning took place in inherently coercive atmosphere, which is inconsistent with prophylactic function of Miranda rule. People v Alls (1993) 83 NY2d 94, 608 NYS2d 139, 629 NE2d 1018, cert den (US) 128 L Ed 2d 474.

Questioning of inmate in correctional facility is not, per se, custodial interrogation under Miranda rule; however, when circumstances of detention and interrogation of prison inmate are no longer analogous to those kinds of detentions found not custodial in nonprison settings, but instead entail added constraint that would lead inmate reasonably to believe that there has been restriction on his freedom over and above that of ordinary confinement in facility, Miranda warnings are necessary. People v Alls (1993) 83 NY2d

Defendant was not entitled to suppression of statements given after waiver of Miranda rights, even though interrogating officer had spoken to defendant about accountability to higher authority when he recognized that defendant was being untruthful about certain details, where defendant was treated with courtesy, allowed ample opportunity for rest, was supplied with cigarettes, soft drinks, and food, and where he repeated that he wished to tell truth and "get it out of [his] mind." People v Torres (1992, 1st Dept) 182 AD2d 587, 583 NYS2d 797, app den 80 NY2d 897, 587 NYS2d 927, 600 NE2d 654.

Defendant voluntarily waived his Miranda rights, even though he answered "no" to 2 questions on Miranda form written in Spanish as to whether he understood his rights to counsel, where he signed statement at bottom of form indicating that he understood all rights set forth in form and that he wanted to speak to officers without lawyer present; moreover, on 2 occasions he indicated orally to police interpreter that he understood his rights and wished to waive them. People v Rivas (1992, 2d Dept) 182 AD2d 722, 582 NYS2d 727, app den 81 NY2d 793, 594 NYS2d 740, 610 NE2d 413.

Questioning conducted by officer following defendant's arrest constituted interrogation for which Miranda warning was required where (1) officers saw defendant hand vial filled with white substance to another in exchange for money, (2) they approached him and saw him throw bag to ground, (3) they grabbed him and asked what he was doing there, to which he replied that he had been smoking marijuana, and (4) after placing him under arrest, officers then asked him whether bag on ground was his; officers' questioning after arrest, while not extensive, transcended boundary between attempt to clarify situation and attempt to elicit statement. People v Soto (1992, 2d Dept) 183 AD2d 926, 584 NYS2d 160.

Statement by defendant to police officer while he was locked in "crack spot" to sell drugs, in response to inquiry as to how he had entered premises which was locked on outside, would not be suppressed as product of custodial interrogation in absence of Miranda warnings, where (1) defendant's confinement in 3-foot square space was not brought about by police or exploited by them to obtain incriminating statement, and (2) there was no interrogation designed to obtain inculpatory statement, but merely question to clarify defendant's predicament. People v Turner (1991) 150 Misc 2d 671, 569 NYS2d 901.

Defendant was entitled to suppression of statements made to officer where (1) he was arrested for driving while intoxicated and read his Miranda warnings, (2) he did not waive his right to be silent and refused to answer questions, and (3) only 5 minutes later, and without repeating Miranda warnings, officer began to ask him questions to complete intoxicated drivers examination form, including material that could not be characterized as pedigree information; defendant's refusal to answer questions was not scrupulously honored, and brief interlude between refusal to answer and inception of questioning was not pronounced break between invocation of right to remain silent and commencement of interrogation. People v Ferrara (1993, City Crim Ct) 158 Misc 2d 671, 602 NYS2d 86.

Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination, protected by Miranda warnings, did not apply where private security guard employed at public water treatment plant questioned defendant, since there was no showing of clear nexus between police and private investigation, notwithstanding that land where alleged offense took place was publicly owned. People v Huff (1993, City Crim Ct) 159 Misc 2d 366, 604 NYS2d 1024.

Assuming arguendo that the trial court in a first-degree murder prosecution erred by failing to sustain defendant's objection and grant his motion to strike testimony by an F.B.I. agent who arrested defendant for unlawful flight to avoid prosecution that he asked defendant "if he was willing to make a statement, at which time he said he wanted to consult with an attorney before talking about the arresting matter," this error was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt where (1) any violation of defendant's rights was de minimis because the testimony was not solicited by the prosecutor, was offered by the F.B.I. agent simply to explain why he discontinued questioning of the defendant, and was not further emphasized by additional questions or comments; (2) the State did not refer in closing arguments to defendant's exercise of his rights to remain silent and to request counsel during interrogation, defendant was not cross-examined on the matter, and no other witness made any reference to defendant's invocation of his rights; and (3) the evidence against defendant was overwhelming, and the record reveals that the sources of defendant's credibility problems were his flight from this state, his efforts to conceal his identity from police, and the fact that his testimony that he shot the victim in defense of himself and another person was contradicted by all other evidence in the case, including testimony by the person in whose defense defendant testified that he acted. State v Elmore (1994) 337 NC 789, 448 SE2d 501.

The trial court did not err in a noncapital first-degree murder prosecution by denying defendant's motion to suppress the clothes he was wearing at the time of the murder, which were recovered in some woods following defendant's statement to officers, on the ground that defendant's Miranda warnings had grown stale. Even if the warnings had grown stale, defendant's argument would fail because he seeks to exclude physical evidence and not the statements given by him; moreover, the record reveals that there was no interrogation of defendant which led to this discovery. State v Hardy (1994) 339 NC 207, 451 SE2d 600.

The trial court did not err in a noncapital first degree murder prosecution by determining that defendant waived his rights knowingly, intelligently and voluntarily where the evidence showed that defendant had only a third-grade education in Vietnam; there was no evidence that he had had any formal training in English or that he was required to speak it at his job; although an interpreter was provided who was fluent in both Vietnamese and English, the defendant's native language was Dega, the language of the Montagnard region of Vietnam; defendant had not been placed under arrest, nor had he been handcuffed, shackled, or restrained in any way when the statement was given; when the waiver of rights form was read to defendant both in English and in Vietnamese, he was asked if he understood his rights and he answered "yes" in English; defendant did not indicate at any time that he did not understand the questions; and a review of the written transcript of the statement itself indicates that defendant was able to respond logically and appropriately to the questions presented to him in English. State v Ysut Mlo (1994) 335 NC 353, 440 SE2d 98.

A confession by a defendant in a burglary, rape, and murder prosecution was admissible even though defendant had been arrested in his home without a warrant, even assuming that the arrest was illegal, where defendant was fully advised of his rights at the police station. State v Worsley (1994) 336 NC 268, 443 SE2d 68.

Any error in the admission of defendant's in-custody statement in a first-degree murder trial without a finding that he reinitiated the questioning following invocation of his right to silence was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt in light of the overwhelming evidence of defendant's guilt, including testimony by six eyewitnesses, evidence that police officers chased defendant from the crime scene and caught him splattered with blood and with a bloody knife still in his hand, and evidence that defendant made several spontaneous incriminating statements after his arrest. State v Eason (1994) 336 NC 730, 445 SE2d 917.

Defendant's in-custody statement was not improperly obtained after defendant invoked his right to an attorney where there was ample evidence to support the trial court's finding that defendant never requested an attorney after he had been given the Miranda warnings. State v Eason (1994) 336 NC 730, 445 SE2d 917.

Defendant initiated further communication with the sheriff after he had earlier asserted his right to counsel, and his confession to the sheriff was admissible in this capital trial, where the sheriff allowed defendant's brother to visit defendant in jail; defendant's brother then went to the sheriff's office and told the sheriff that defendant wanted to talk with him; the sheriff had defendant brought to his office; the sheriff began the conference by asking defendant whether he wanted to talk with him in regard to what had happened; and defendant answered that he wanted to do so. State v Harris (1994) 338 NC 129, 449 SE2d 371.

Where defendant had been properly advised of his Miranda rights and had asserted his right to counsel approximately twelve hours before he initiated communications with the sheriff, the sheriff was not required to again advise defendant of his Miranda rights before interrogating him, and defendant's subsequent confession to the sheriff was not inadmissible because the sheriff failed to advise defendant that if he decided to answer questions he could stop at any time and failed to ask defendant if he wanted a lawyer at that time. State v Harris (1994) 338 NC 129, 449 SE2d 371.

The trial court did not err in a first-degree murder prosecution by not suppressing defendant's statement to an officer where a psychiatrist testified concerning defendant's history of manic episodes but could not give an opinion as to whether defendant understood his rights at the time he gave his inculpatory statement to the officer, and a nurse who saw defendant several hours after he was arrested testified that he was upset, tense, and nervous and in her opinion delusional and could not have understood his rights, but also testified that he was able to understand the questions asked of him and that he responded in a reasonable manner to those questions. There was substantial competent evidence to support the trial court's finding that the defendant understood his constitutional rights at the time he waived them. State v Perry (1994) 338 NC 457, 450 SE2d 471.

The trial court did not err in a noncapital first-degree murder prosecution by admitting defendant's inculpatory statements where defendant contended that the statements were not made knowingly, intelligently, or voluntarily, but none of the evidence presented suggests that defendant's mental capacity was in any way impaired, that his will was overpowered, or that the officers attempted to physically or psychologically torture defendant to evoke a confession, the court found that "defendant was never promised anything, was never threatened, and had no offers of reward or of assistance with any prosecution in the event he did cooperate with the officers," and defendant made a correction in the written statement. Applying the totality of the circumstances standard, there was no error in concluding that defendant's constitutional rights were not violated and that the statements were admissible. State v Corbett (1994) 339 NC 313, 451 SE2d 252.

The trial court did not err in the denial of a juvenile defendant's motion to suppress an inculpatory statement he made to police officers where the trial court found from uncontroverted evidence that defendant was fully advised of his Miranda rights and his rights under G.S. § 7A-595(a), and the court also found that defendant "freely, knowingly, intelligently and voluntarily" waived his rights and that his statement was made "freely, voluntarily and understandingly." The trial court's findings were not insufficient to support the ruling admitting defendant's confession into evidence because they did not include the precise words of G.S. § 7A- 595(d) that defendant "knowingly, willingly, and understandingly" waived his rights. State v Gibson (1995) 342 NC 142, 463 SE2d 193.

The trial court did not err in a first- degree murder prosecution by denying defendant's motion to suppress a statement to police and a knife obtained as a result thereof where defendant made no statement until he had been advised of his Miranda rights and had signed a Miranda rights waiver form; he responded affirmatively when he was asked if he understood his rights and wished to waive them; he was not restrained in any way, and the interrogation was conducted in an unlocked office; officers' weapons were never removed from their holsters in the presence of defendant or used to threaten him; defendant did not appear to be sleepy or under the influence of drugs or alcohol during the interrogation; he appeared to be calm, alert, and oriented, did not appear to be frightened, and was able to converse freely with the officers; an officer testified that he engaged defendant in casual conversation to develop rapport, denied threatening defendant or making any promises to induce defendant's inculpatory statement, denied ever telling defendant that defendant needed to make a statement to save his life or avoid the death penalty, and denied telling defendant that he probably saved his life by confessing; another officer testified that he was present when defendant was read his Miranda rights and signed the waiver form; that defendant was oriented, did not smell of alcohol, and did not appear to be physically or mentally impaired; that he had engaged defendant in general conversation to develop rapport with defendant; denied threatening defendant in any way or making any promises to induce defendant's inculpatory statement; denied that defendant had been told to confess or else he would face the death penalty; and denied that defendant was told that he had probably just saved his own life by confessing; another officer testified that when defendant was arrested at his home in the early morning hours of 28 May 1992 before being taken to the police station, he was awake, oriented, and coherent; defendant's speech was not slurred, and he did not appear to be under the influence of alcohol. Upon a review of the totality of the circumstances, it is clear that defendant was not coerced or threatened into confessing his participation in this murder; and the trial court did not err in concluding that defendant freely, knowingly, and intelligently waived his Miranda rights and that defendant's inculpatory statement to the police was given voluntarily. State v Knight (1995) 340 NC 531, 459 SE2d 481.

Admission of testimony by a deputy regarding defendant's statements that she had "blacked out" and could not remember anything and the prosecutor's subsequent cross-examination of defendant about those statements did not violate defendant's Fifth Amendment right to silence, since defendant's statements, though made while she was in custody, were not the result of police interrogation; and defendant's statement that she could not remember anything did not invoke her right to silence but instead could only be construed as her indication that she would willingly have discussed the case had she been able to recall further information. State v Lambert (1995) 341 NC 36, 460 SE2d 123.

The trial court did not err in a first- degree murder prosecution in the admission of statements made by defendant while he was being processed where the evidence showed that there is no material conflict as to whether defendant was being interrogated during his fingerprint processing. An officer simply told defendant that he would talk to him later and answer any questions he might have and, even after defendant made these remarks, told him that he would talk with defendant later. The officer's comments were not intended nor reasonably expected to elicit an incriminating response. State v Vick (1995) 341 NC 569, 461 SE2d 655.

The trial court did not err in a first- degree murder prosecution by denying defendant's motion to suppress statements made to a detective where defendant contended that the statements were the result of a custodial interrogation after he had invoked his right to remain silent and could not be spontaneous. While defendant was in custody, he was not interrogated: the court found that the detective asked defendant nothing further after defendant signed a paper that he no longer wished to make a statement, the detective asked defendant what had happened to his hand after he complained that it hurt during fingerprinting, defendant replied that he had hit a tree, the detective asked why, and defendant said, "I should have hit her a little harder so I could really hurt my hand." The detective had no reason to believe that his questions about defendant's hand were reasonably likely to evoke an incriminating response; defendant's remarks were volunteered statements and the detective's questions did not convert the conversation into an interrogation under Miranda. State v Walls (1995) 342 NC 1, 463 SE2d 738.

There was no error in a first- degree murder prosecution where the trial court concluded that defendant freely, knowingly, intelligently, and voluntarily waived his rights after finding that defendant was not under the influence of alcohol where a detective testified that defendant had told the detective that he was under the influence of beer but the detective stated that, although he could smell beer upon defendant and believed that defendant had been drinking, he was not of the opinion that defendant was under the influence. Furthermore, the detective testified that defendant remembered the first set of Miranda rights given him in the patrol car. The trial court's findings of fact were based upon competent evidence and therefore are binding on appeal and it cannot be said, viewed under the totality of the circumstances, that the trial court's conclusion of law was error. State v Walls (1995) 342 NC 1, 463 SE2d 738.

Defendant's statement to an officer after his arrest for drug offenses that he was not robbing or stealing but was "just trying to make a living" was admissible even though no Miranda warnings had been given where the statement was made voluntarily and not in response to any question by an officer. State v Taylor (1995) 117 NC App 644, 453 SE2d 225.

Based on defendant's attorney's extensive questions pertaining to defendant's willingness to cooperate with authorities and the reference to the "Voluntary Consent to Identification Procedures" form which indicated defendant was willing to take a polygraph test, it was not error for the trial court to allow the prosecution to subsequently elicit testimony from the investigator that, although defendant initially agreed to submit to a polygraph test, he refused some days later. State v Cannada (1995) 119 NC App 311, 458 SE2d 268.

There was no merit to defendant's contention that the trial court committed reversible error in denying his motion to suppress a statement given by him as a result of a polygraph examination because the statement was obtained in a coercive and oppressive manner, since defendant's first statement was made when defendant was not under arrest but was free to leave, and it was made voluntarily; because defendant was not under arrest, he was not entitled to Miranda warnings before making the statement; his second statement was therefore not the fruit of an earlier illegally obtained statement; the second statement was voluntary in that defendant voluntarily came to the police station, voluntarily submitted to the polygraph, and was free to leave at any time; and neither the polygraph operator's asking questions off the polygraph nor questioning by officers vitiated defendant's waiver of his Miranda warnings with respect to the second statement. State v Soles (1995) 119 NC App 375, 459 SE2d 4.

In prosecution for first-degree felony murder, trial court committed reversible error in refusing to grant defendant's motion to suppress his confession where, after defendant received Miranda warnings, he was asked if he wanted to talk to police officers and he responded that he would rather talk to lawyer first, but police continued to interrogate defendant. Booker v State (1993, Okla Crim) 851 P2d 544.

In prosecution for first-degree felony murder, trial court committed reversible error in refusing to grant defendant's motion to suppress his confession where, after defendant received Miranda warnings, he was asked if he wanted to talk to police officers and he responded that he would rather talk to lawyer first, but police continued to interrogate him. Defendant's statement, "I would rather talk to a lawyer, first," was clear and concise request for counsel that should have acted as bar to further inquiry. Booker v State (1993, Okla Crim) 851 P2d 544.

Prior experience of the defendant with Miranda warnings suggested that his waiver of his Miranda rights was knowing and voluntary where he had a long history of arrests during which he frequently exercised his Miranda rights and testimony was also presented that the defendant had waived his Miranda rights on at least 3 earlier occasions. Commonwealth v Miller (1995, Pa) 664 A2d 1310, petition for certiorari filed (Nov 21, 1995).

Trial court did not err in refusing to suppress confession, even though defendant alleged that officers failed to inform him that attorney, employed by his father, was present at sheriff's department and asking to see him, where defendant voluntarily and knowingly waived rights prior to making confession. State v Stephenson (1994, Tenn) 878 SW2d 530, related proceeding (Tenn Crim) 1994 Tenn Crim App LEXIS 366 and reh den (Tenn) 1994 Tenn LEXIS 203.

Murder suspect who was informed of his Miranda rights before being interrogated by police did not implicitly request counsel by spontaneously shouting "read me my rights" and, on another occasion, by telling officer that he would not give his name but would talk to another officer. These remarks could reasonably be construed as request for counsel. Moreover, he did not implicitly request counsel by refusing to answer certain questions; merely refusing to answer questions, without more, could not reasonably be construed as request for counsel. State v Allen (1992, Utah) 839 P2d 291, 194 Utah Adv Rep 12.

Miranda warning was not required at inquest proceeding, because witness was not in police custody. State v Tonzola (1993) 159 Vt 491, 621 A2d 243.

Where murder suspect had been arrested, advised of his Miranda rights, and was being interrogated by police detective, suspect's question, "Do you think I need an attorney here," did not constitute unambiguous request for counsel, and detective's response in shaking his head slightly from side to side while holding his arms out and his palms up in a shrug-like manner, stating, "You're just talking to us," did not invalidate suspect's earlier waiver of his Miranda rights. Mueller v Commonwealth (1992, Va) 422 SE2d 380, petition for certiorari filed (Feb 3, 1993).

Where, after being advised of Miranda rights, defendant asked, "Would it help out any" to "have a lawyer here," and interrogating officer answered, "Well, that depends on whether or not you want to tell the truth," court assumed arguendo that confession should have been excluded but nonetheless upheld defendant's murder conviction in view of defendant's having confessed many other times to many different persons; any conceivable error in admission of confession in question was "harmless beyond a reasonable doubt." Jenkins v Commonwealth (1992, Va) 423 SE2d 360, cert den (US) 123 L Ed 2d 483, 113 S Ct 1862.

Defendant's talking with police officer on telephone, both parties' locations being undisclosed by court, did not constitute custodial interrogation. State v Mahoney (1995) 80 Wash App 495, 909 P2d 949.

When seeking admission of statements made during custodial questioning, separate showings which state must make are that defendant was informed of his Miranda rights, understood them and intelligently waived them and also that defendant's statement was voluntary. State v Lee (1993, App) 175 Wis 2d 348, 499 NW2d 250.

In absence of countervailing evidence, once state has established prima facie case of waiver of Miranda rights and voluntariness of in-custody statement, statement should be admitted into evidence. State v Lee (1993, App) 175 Wis 2d 348, 499 NW2d 250.

In prosecution for larceny, defendant was not in custody for capital Miranda purposes, even though defendant was awakened and questioned by officers at approximately 3:20 a.m. in his room at community-based corrections facility, where officers gave no outward signs that defendant was not free to leave or ask police to leave nor any other indication that defendant was under arrest, defendant was in his "home" and where record contained no indication defendant was oppressed by visit; defendant was alert, cooperative, responsive and comfortable during interview and thus no objective manifestations of custodial setting were present. Glass v State (1993, Wyo) 853 P2d 972.

Inculpatory written statement that defendant gave to police shortly after his arrest was not obtained in violation of his right counsel under Fifth Amendment where defendant was advised of his Miranda rights three times before he gave statement to police officer; statement was reduced to written form, read back to defendant and, when officer asked him whether he would sign it, defendant asked, "Do I need to talk to a lawyer before I sign?"; officer told defendant that he could have lawyer if he wanted one, but defendant stated that he was willing to sign immediately without lawyer; out of abundance of caution, defendant was taken before magistrate who again explained defendant's Miranda rights, read his statement to him, asked if he wanted to sign statement without first consulting attorney; and defendant responded that he did want to sign without consulting attorney and did so. Defendant's "request" for counsel was equivocal at best; further questioning was limited to ascertaining his wishes regarding presences of counsel; and his knowing and intelligent waiver of counsel was shown as matter of law. Robinson v State (1991, Tex Crim) 851 SW2d 216, reh gr (Jul 3, 1991) and reh den (Tex Crim) 1993 Tex Crim App LEXIS 34.

Arrestee's admission that he used his hands to break into store was product of custodial interrogation, where arresting/investigating officer continued to ask arrestee questions intended to elicit incriminating statements after repeated Miranda warnings and arrestee's silence. State v Fowlkes (1994, La App 2d Cir) 634 So 2d 953.

Drug codefendant's subsequent statements made after police officers gave Miranda warnings twice and told her that she would be arrested immediately if she did not cooperate and that her cooperation would be made known to prosecutor was not involuntary under totality of circumstances analysis where codefendant was not handcuffed or subjected to physical or emotional coercion, no lengthy interrogation was conducted, and most statements were made in her own home. United States v Mendoza (1996, CA8 Iowa) 85 F3d 1347.

Drug defendant voluntarily waived his right against self- incrimination and to attorney during custodial interrogation where evidence supported finding that Miranda rights were read to him at beginning of interrogation, defendant understood English, and no deceptive or coercive statements were made. United States v Navarro (1996, CA7 Wis) 90 F3d 1245, reh den (1996, CA7 Wis) 1996 US App LEXIS 23007.

§ 750 Sixth Amendment rights; right to counsel

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Under Escobedo v Illinois, 21 where an investigation is no longer a general inquiry into an unsolved crime but has begun to focus on a particular suspect, the suspect has been taken into police custody, the police carry out a process of interrogations that lends itself to eliciting incriminating statements, the suspect has requested and been denied an opportunity to consult with his lawyer, and the police have not effectively warned him of his absolute constitutional right to remain silent, the suspect has been denied the assistance of counsel in violation of the Sixth Amendment, so that no statement elicited by the police during the interrogation could be used against him at a criminal trial. 22

◆ Caution: Although Escobedo does not require the commencement of an adversary judicial criminal proceeding for the Sixth Amendment right to counsel to attach, it stands virtually alone in this regard. The overwhelming weight of authority holds that the initiation of such a proceeding is necessary for the attachment of the Sixth

Under Massiah v United States it was held that the defendant is denied his right to counsel under the Sixth Amendment, and that confessions or other incriminating statements are not admissible, where they have been deliberately elicited from an accused by federal agents after he has been indicted and in the absence of counsel. 24

◆ Observation: The primary concern of the Massiah line of decisions is secret interrogation by investigatory techniques that are the equivalent of direct police interrogation. Since the Sixth Amendment is not violated whenever, by luck or happenstance, the state obtains incriminating statements from the accused after the right to counsel has attached, a defendant does not make out a violation of that right simply by showing that an informant, either through prior arrangement or voluntarily, reported his incriminating statements to the police. Rather, the defendant must demonstrate that the police and their informant took some action, beyond merely listening, that was designed deliberately to elicit the incriminating remarks. 25

The clear rule of Massiah is that once adversary proceedings have commenced against an individual, he has a right to legal representation when the government interrogates him. 26 Whatever else it may mean, the right to counsel granted by the Sixth and Fourteenth Amendments means at least that a person is entitled to the help of a lawyer at or after the time that judicial proceedings have been initiated against him, whether by way of a formal charge, preliminary hearing, indictment, information, or arraignment. 27

Furthermore, the accused's right to counsel has been extended to certain "critical" pretrial proceedings, 28 as a result of the recognition that at those proceedings, the accused is confronted, just as at trial, by the procedural system, or by his expert adversary, or by both, in a situation where the results of the confrontation might well settle the accused's fate and reduce the trial itself to a mere formality. 29 The need for the assistance of counsel at the pretrial stage has been characterized as vital. 30

Once the right to counsel has attached and has been asserted, the state must honor it. This means more than simply that the state cannot prevent the accused from obtaining the assistance of counsel. The Sixth Amendment imposes on the state an affirmative obligation to respect and preserve the accused's choice to seek this assistance. 31

Incriminating statements pertaining to pending charges are inadmissible at the trial of those charges, notwithstanding the fact that the police were also investigating other crimes, if, in obtaining this evidence, the state violated the Sixth Amendment by knowingly circumventing the accused's right to the assistance of counsel. 32

However, incriminating statements pertaining to other crimes, as to which the Sixth Amendment has not yet attached are, of course, admissible at a trial of those offenses. 33 To exclude evidence pertaining to charges as to which the Sixth Amendment right to counsel had not attached at the time the evidence was obtained, simply because other charges were pending at that time, would unnecessarily frustrate the public's interest in the investigation of criminal activities. 34 The continuing investigation of uncharged offenses does not violate the Sixth Amendment. 35

◆ Observation: Although the decision of Edwards v Arizona 36 that an accused, having expressed his desire to deal with the police only through counsel, is not subject to further interrogation by the authorities until counsel has been made available to him, unless, the accused himself initiates further communication, exchanges, or conversations with the police, 37 rested on the Fifth Amendment and concerned a request for counsel made during custodial interrogation, the reasoning of Edwards applies with even greater force to Sixth Amendment cases. Whereas Edwards is grounded in the understanding that the assertion of the right to counsel is a significant event, and that additional safeguards are necessary when the accused asks for counsel, the assertion is no less significant and the need for additional safeguards no less clear, when the request for counsel is made at an arraignment and when the basis for the claim is the Sixth Amendment. Accordingly, if police initiate interrogation, after a defendant's assertion, at an arraignment or similar proceeding, of his right to counsel, any waiver of the defendant's right to counsel for that police-initiated interrogation is invalid. 38 However, the police are not barred from initiating a postindictment interrogation meeting with an accused who has not sought to exercise his Sixth Amendment right to counsel. 39

§ 750 ----Sixth amendment rights; right to counsel [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Defendant's Sixth amendment right to counsel did not attach at time police officer refused his request to speak with his attorney before deciding whether to take blood/alcohol test where filing of criminal complaint against him for drunk driving did not occur until after he refused to submit to test. Roberts v Maine (1995, CA1 Me) 48 F3d 1287.

Trial court's failure to suppress tape recordings made by codefendant on government's behalf concerning certain burglary after defendants' right to counsel had attached with respect to earlier burglary did not violate defendants' Sixth Amendment rights under Massiah v United States (1964) 377 US 201, 12 L Ed 2d 246, 84 S Ct 1199, where defendants had not been charged with later burglary as substantive offense. United States v DeVillio (1993, CA2 NY) 983 F2d 1185.

Bank robbery defendant raised colorable claim that government violated his Sixth amendment right to counsel by placing him in jail cell with known informant who may have been acting as government agent and who testified that defendant told him that he committed bank robbery; therefore, because District Court declined to hold evidentiary hearing and record was inadequate to resolve claim, case was remanded to District court for such a hearing, since such conduct, if proven, could have violated defendant's Sixth amendment rights. United States v Brink (1994, CA3 Pa) 39 F3d 419.

Government's tape recording of telephone conversations between defendant and his former attorney did not violate defendant's Sixth Amendment right to counsel where, although defendant was target of criminal investigation and was represented by counsel, he had not yet been indicted. United States v Heinz (1993, CA5 Tex) 983 F2d 609, reh, en banc, den (CA5) 1993 US App LEXIS 5849.

Defendant's Sixth amendment right to counsel attached to federal charges where he was under indictment at time of his arrest. United States v Laury (1995, CA5 Tex) 49 F3d 145.

Defendant's Sixth amendment right to counsel on state charges for armed robbery of grocery store was insufficient to invoke his Fifth Amendment right to counsel during custodial interrogation on federal charges of violating Hobbs Act by robbing grocery stores. United States v Laury (1995, CA5 Tex) 49 F3d 145.

Government had right to use defendant's uncounseled statement obtained by FBI agent during custodial interrogation in violation of Sixth amendment to impeach defendant. United States v Laury (1995, CA5 Tex) 49 F3d 145.

Murder defendant's incriminating statements to undercover FBI agents who were placed in cells near defendant's to elicit statements regarding murder that was unrelated to one for which he was incarcerated and before he was charged with murder in question were admissible in evidence and did not violate defendant's Sixth Amendment right to counsel. United States v Clark (1993, CA6 Tenn) 988 F2d 1459, petition for certiorari filed (May 12, 1993).

Murder defendant's incriminating statements to undercover police cellmate made while defendant was in jail on different charges did not violate his Sixth Amendment right to counsel where he had not yet been charged with murder when he made incriminating statements. Salkil v Delo (1993, CA8 Mo) 990 F2d 386.

Defendant knowingly and voluntarily waived his Sixth Amendment right to counsel, and inculpatory statements he made during interview with Forest Service agent were admissible in evidence, despite fact that he was not informed that he had been indicted and was not under arrest, where he signed written waiver of his rights after being given Miranda warnings; agent's statement to defendant that his cooperation would "help" him did not invalidate waiver where statement occurred after waiver was signed. United States v Chadwick (1993, CA8 Ark) 999 F2d 1282.

Capital felony murder defendant was competent to waive his Sixth Amendment right to counsel at time he was questioned by law enforcement officers, and he was properly found to have knowingly and voluntarily waived that right, where state hospital report had found him to be mildly mentally retarded but competent at time of offense and competent to stand trial and he received Miranda warning and signed rights waiver form before officers questioned him. Branscomb v Norris (1995, CA8 Ark) 47 F3d 258.

Any violation of defendant's Sixth Amendment right to counsel that may have resulted from excluding defense counsel for about 10 minutes from witness preparation stage of pretrial lineup was harmless where counsel monitored rest of lineup procedure after witnesses were given preliminary instructions, counsel testified that she did not notice anything unusual about actual lineup, and later during trial she had opportunity to reconstruct all aspects of lineup and related statements between witnesses and police. Jordan v Ducharme (1993, CA9 Wash) 983 F2d 933, 93 CDOS 199, 93 Daily Journal DAR 464.

Provision for admission of voluntary confession or any self-incriminating statement in 18 USCS § 3501 does not trump Edwards, which provides that defendant is not subject to further interrogation after he has invoked his right to counsel, and thus defendant's incriminating statements, which were unconstitutionally elicited after he had invoked his right to counsel, were not admissible under § 3501. United States v Cheely (1994, CA9 Alaska) 36 F3d 1439, 94 Daily Journal DAR 13898.

Defendant had no standing to challenge disqualification of attorneys for codefendants on ground that disqualification deprived codefendants of their right to counsel of choice, since Sixth amendment right to counsel is personal right. United States v Jones (1995, CA10 Wyo) 44 F3d 860.

Motorist had no right to appointed counsel in prosecution for speeding violation for which small fines were only sanction imposed, since that right attaches only in prosecutions where defendant is actually sentenced to jail. Elliott v City of Wheat Ridge (1995, CA10 Colo) 49 F3d 1458, reh den (Apr 7, 1995).

Admission in evidence of testimony of murder defendant's fellow inmate did not violate Sixth amendment where inmate testified that he was not agent of any law enforcement officer or agency, that he did not question defendant, and that defendant "more or less volunteered" information concerning murder in question. Baxter v Thomas (1995, CA11 Ga) 45 F3d 1501.

Defendant did not knowingly and intelligently waive right to counsel during interrogation, where there was ambiguity as to whether he invoked right to counsel when he stated that he did not "have the money to buy" legal representation, which detective failed to clarify before continuing interrogation. State v Hoey (1994) 77 Hawaii 17, 881 P2d 504.

Suspect's statement, "I'm not sure what I want to do," when asked if he understood his rights, did not constitute invocation of his right to counsel, even though police officer did not follow up with any inquiry to clarify comment, where statement was ambiguous, and fact that suspect had counsel appointed for him on another state's charges did not prevent interrogation outside presence of counsel for crimes unrelated to charge for which counsel had been appointed. State v Morris (1994) 255 Kan 964, 880 P2d 1244.

Defendant's refusal to affirmatively waive rights when asked to sign waiver portion of rights form, coupled with statement that he did not know what he should do, was not equivocal and ambiguous assertion of right to counsel, where defendant never discussed subject of obtaining lawyer at that time, and statements made in police car, as well as statement about gas chamber, were exchanges initiated by defendant. State v Sahakian (1994, Mo App) 886 SW2d 178.

Any error in the admission of defendant's in-custody statement in a first-degree murder trial without a finding that he reinitiated the questioning following invocation of his right to silence was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt in light of the overwhelming evidence of defendant's guilt, including testimony by six eyewitnesses, evidence that police officers chased defendant from the crime scene and caught him splattered with blood and with a bloody knife still in his hand, and evidence that defendant made several spontaneous incriminating statements after his arrest. State v Eason (1994) 336 NC 730, 445 SE2d 917.

Defendant's in-custody statement was not improperly obtained after defendant invoked his right to an attorney where there was ample evidence to support the trial court's finding that defendant never requested an attorney after he had been given the Miranda warnings. State v Eason (1994) 336 NC 730, 445 SE2d 917.

In murder prosecution, defendant's having asked, "Do I need an attorney?" or "Do you think I need an attorney?" at some point during interrogation of defendant did not rise to level of equivocal request for counsel, where defendant was of at least average intelligence, had completed his GED, and had some writing ability, and there was no indication of mental problems. Mitchell v State (1994, Okla Crim) 884 P2d 1186.

Capital murder defendant sought to suppress statements on ground that he was denied Sixth Amendment right to counsel. At time statements were made, defendant had been arrested for theft of car stolen in course of robbery-murder, but he had not been formally charged with capital murder. Sixth Amendment is offense-specific, and does not attach to an offense for which no adversarial proceedings have begun. Nevertheless, Sixth amendment was deemed to have attached to the subsequent capital murder charge for several reasons. First, defendant had been arrested for an offense, the theft, that was to become an important element of the later capital murder prosecution. Second, the theft was so closely related to the capital murder with which defendant was subsequently charged that it was eventually used to aggravate murder to capital murder. Third, declining to hold that Sixth Amendment had attached in this case might encourage police in such cases circumvent Sixth amendment by arresting defendant for predicate crimes for purpose of questioning him in connection with aggravated crime. Upton v State (1993, Tex Crim) 853 SW2d 548, reh den (May 26, 1993).

In narcotics prosecution, defendant's having asked, "Do you think I need an attorney?" following her signing of Miranda form did not constitute unequivocal request for counsel; question appeared to be nothing more than request by defendant for advice, and equivocal question is insufficient to invoke right to counsel. State v Walkowiak (1994) 183 Wis 2d 478, 515 NW2d 863.

The Sixth Amendment right to counsel was not violated where, after the accused's arraignment, a police informant in the same cell listened to and reported the accused's incriminating statements, but did not question the accused. Kuhlmann v Wilson, 477 US 436, 91 L Ed 2d 364, 106 S Ct 2616, on remand (CA2) 800 F2d 304.

Where the defendant made incriminating statements to his codefendant, who, after arranging a deal with the police whereby no further charges would be brought against him if he cooperated, wore a body recorder while meeting with the defendant ostensibly to plan defense strategy for the upcoming trial, the defendant's Sixth Amendment right to counsel was violated, insofar as the police knowingly circumvented the defendant's right to have counsel present at a confrontation between the defendant and a police agent and the confrontation occurred after indictment. Maine v Moulton, 474 US 159, 88 L Ed 2d 481, 106 S Ct 477.

Ruling that Massiah was controlling, and that the accused's incriminating statements, made after indictment and while in custody to his cellmate, a government informant, were inadmissible, it was determined that by intentionally creating a situation likely to induce the defendant to make incriminating statements without the assistance of counsel, the government had violated his Sixth Amendment right to counsel. United States v Henry, 447 US 264, 65 L Ed 2d 115, 100 S Ct 2183.

During perhaps the most critical period of the proceedings against these defendants, that is to say, from the time of their arraignment until the beginning of their trial, when consultation, thoroughgoing investigation and preparation were vitally important, the defendants did not have the aid of counsel in any real sense, although they were as much entitled to such aid during that period as at the trial itself. Powell v Alabama, 287 US 45, 77 L Ed 158, 53 S Ct 55, 84 ALR 527.

§ 751 --Use of nontestifying codefendant's confession– Bruton rule

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

The admission at a joint trial of a nontestifying codefendant's confession, which inculpatates the other codefendant being tried with the declarant, violates the other codefendant's Sixth Amendment right to confront the witnesses against him. 40 Use of a nontestifying codefendant's confession at a joint criminal trial violates the other codefendant's Sixth Amendment confrontation rights even if the accused's allegedly interlocking incriminating statements, corroborating the codefendant's confession, are also introduced at the trial. 41 Nevertheless, the admission of a codefendant's confession does not violate the accused's Sixth Amendment confrontation rights, even though the accused is linked to the nontestifying codefendant's confession by other evidence properly admitted against the accused at the trial, where the nontestifying codefendant's confession is redacted to eliminate not only the accused's name, but any reference to the accused's existence, and the jury is given a proper limiting instruction not to use the codefendant's confession against the accused. 42 Moreover, a confession of a nontestifying codefendant which is redacted to substitute a neutral pronoun or other general word for the name of another codefendant does not violate Bruton rule unless it compels a direct implication of the complaining other codefendant. 43 For example, if a redacted confession describes a codefendant's participation in the crime, it remains clearly inculpatory and therefore inadmissible, if the jury would logically conclude from the other evidence in the record that the neutral pronoun or general word indeed represented the codefendant. 44

The rule that a nontestifying codefendant's confession which inculpatates another codefendant may not be used at the joint trial of the defendants, referred to as the Bruton rule, does not apply at a bench trial, 45 to the statements of an accomplice who is not tried as a codefendant, 46 or to a codefendant who takes the stand and denies making such a statement. 47 The Bruton rule also does not apply if the statement does not inculcate the codefendant who objects to its admission. 48

When the Bruton rule is applicable, the government has three alternatives if it wishes to put in evidence the nontestifying codefendant's confession. The government may resort to redaction of the confession, deleting all references to the other codefendants from the declarant's statement, 49 severance of the joint trial, 50 or to a multiple-jury procedure. 51

The constitutional error committed by admitting in evidence at a joint trial a nontestifying codefendant's confession which inculcates the other codefendant is rendered harmless beyond a reasonable doubt where the evidence supplied through the confession is merely cumulative and other evidence of the accused's guilt is overwhelming. 52

§ 751 --Use of nontestifying codefendant's confession– Bruton rule [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Even if defendant Littlejohn's confession implicated defendant Dayson in the crime charged, Dayson was not prejudiced since the confession was largely corroborated by other evidence, including eyewitness testimony and Dayson's own testimony that he went armed to the crime scene and participated in an armed robbery in which the victim was killed. State v Littlejohn (1995) 340 NC 750, 459 SE2d 629.

Testimony regarding an out-of- court statement by the codefendant in which he implicated himself and the defendant in a murder was properly admitted into evidence, notwithstanding that the codefendant chose not to testify, since there were strong indicia of the reliability of the statement where (1) the statement was spontaneous and against the penal interest of the codefendant, and (2) the defendant failed to deny the statement, even though it was made in his presence. Commonwealth v Cull (1995, Pa) 656 A2d 476.

The admission at a joint trial of the confession of a nontestifying codefendant, who could not be cross-examined because he invoked his Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination, which made repeated references to another codefendant, who was convicted of aiding an attempted robbery, was harmless error, where the other codefendant conceded that several people he knew attempted the armed robbery in issue, seriously wounding one victim with a shotgun blast, and admitted that he called one of the eventual attackers to find out if he wanted to participate, approved the participation of another of the attackers, helped arrange transportation for the crime, provided the meeting place for the attackers at his home, told the attackers of the location of guns that they hoped to steal, and lead the attackers, one of whom was carrying a shotgun, to the victim's house as they talked about how they would divide their intended spoils. Because the codefendant admitted his crime, the Sixth Amendment violation at his trial could not have led any rational jury to a different verdict. Morrison v Duckworth (CA7 Ind) 929 F2d 1180, 32 Fed Rules Evid Serv 1214.

§ 752 Fourth Amendment rights; fruit of poisonous tree doctrine

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

Confessions or admissions made after the police confront a suspect with evidence obtained through an illegal search or seizure are fruits of the poisonous tree and must be suppressed. 53 Similarly, inculpatory statements obtained following a warrantless arrest without probable cause are inadmissible as a fruit of the unlawful arrest. 54

If officers illegally seize a shotgun in a suspect's room and ask the suspect for an explanation, the suspect's resulting statement is inadmissible as a fruit of the illegal search. 55 However, where a search was conducted in accordance with the specific standardized state police tow-in policy regulating inventory searches, 56 and where the defendant had not otherwise contested the validity of his arrest, the defendant's confession was not the fruit of an illegal search. 57 If there are facts which render a limited investigation reasonable, a suspect's voluntary statement 58 during the course of that preliminary investigation may not be suppressed. 59

In determining the voluntariness of a confession preceded by a Fourth Amendment violation, it must be decided whether the confession was sufficiently an act of free will to purge the primary taint of the illegal arrest. 60 The prosecution has the burden of showing admissibility. 61 While Miranda warnings 62 do constitute a factor to be considered in ascertaining whether a confession is obtained by utilizing an illegal arrest, there are other facts to be examined, including the temporal proximity of the arrest and the confession, the presence of intervening circumstances, and particularly, the purpose and flagrancy of the official misconduct. 63

The Fourth Amendment exclusionary rule does not bar a state's use in a criminal trial of a written inculpatory statement made by a murder suspect at a police station, even though the statement was taken after the suspect was arrested by the police in his home without a warrant and without consent to their entry, in violation of the rule of Payton v New York 64 —that the Fourth Amendment prohibits the police from making a warrantless and nonconsensual entry into a suspect's home in order to make a routine felony arrest—where (1) the statement was not the product of being in unlawful custody, inasmuch as the police had probable cause to arrest the suspect; (2) the police had a justification to question the suspect prior to his arrest, so that the suspect's subsequent statement was not an exploitation of the illegal entry into the suspect's home; and (3) the statement was not the fruit of having been arrested in the home rather than someplace else. 65

A confession which is a product of an illegal arrest is not rendered admissible by being freely and voluntarily given, since the voluntariness of a confession for purposes of the Fifth Amendment is merely a threshold requirement for Fourth Amendment analysis. 66 Even in the absence of oppressive circumstances, a court may suppress a confession in order to deter police misconduct. 67

§ 753 Corroboration of confessions; corpus delicti doctrine; trustworthiness doctrine

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

The corpus delicti, which is defined as the body or substance of the crime charged, has two components: (1) an unlawful injury, and (2) an individual's unlawful conduct as a source of that injury. 68 Establishing a corpus delicti requires proof that a specific injury, loss, or harm resulted, and that the injury was caused by a criminal agency rather than by an innocent or accidental one. 69 To establish a corpus delicti, the government need only prove that a crime has been committed. Identifying the defendant as the perpetrator of the crime is not required, and proof of the corpus delicti may be based on circumstantial evidence. 70

Historically, the corpus delicti doctrine incorporated the almost-universal American rule that in order to convict a defendant of a crime based upon an extrajudicial confession or admission, 71 the defendant's statement must be corroborated by some evidence of the corpus delicti. 72 The major purpose of this rule is to prevent errors in conviction based upon untrue confessions alone. 73

Most jurisdictions today follow the original corpus delicti doctrine requiring proof from another source that a crime has occurred. However, the federal courts and a number of state courts have adopted the trustworthiness doctrine that emphasizes the reliability of the defendant's confession over the independent evidence of the corpus delicti. 74 Under the trustworthiness doctrine, direct proof of the corpus delicti is not required, and the evidence may even be collateral to the crime itself. 75

The trustworthiness doctrine has been adopted as the "best rule." 76 Rejecting the original corpus delicti doctrine, it has instead been held that confessions, admissions, and exculpatory statements must be corroborated by substantial independent evidence which would tend to establish the trustworthiness of the statement. 77

◆ Comment: Emphasizing that admissions have the same possibilities for errors as confessions, it has been recognized that the need for corroboration extends beyond strict confessions to admissions. Further, exculpatory statements call for corroboration to the same extent as other statements. 78 It is sufficient if the corroboration supports the essential facts admitted sufficiently to justify a jury inference of their truth. 79 Requiring the government to produce substantial independent evidence serves a dual function: it tends to make the admission or confession reliable, thus corroborating it, while also establishing independently the other necessary elements of the offense. 80

The Supreme Court of the United States has held that a defendant's constitutional rights are violated if his conviction, in a federal or state court, is based, in whole or in part, on an involuntary confession, regardless of its truth or falsity, and that this is so even if there is ample evidence aside from the confession to support the conviction. 81 Furthermore, use of a nontestifying codefendant's confession may violate the Sixth Amendment right to confrontation. 82

§ 753 ----Corroboration of confessions; corpus delicti doctrine; trustworthiness doctrine [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

After court has properly admitted evidence of confession and correctly tested sufficiency of evidence to support conviction, court has no obligation to instruct jury to determine that confession is trustworthy before considering it as evidence of guilt, although court does have discretion to determine that question of trustworthiness is such close one that it would be appropriate to instruct jury to conduct its own corroboration analysis. United States v Singleterry (1994, CA1 Me) 29 F3d 733.

The corpus delicti rule for confessions did not apply in a capital sentencing proceeding to render inadmissible defendant's uncorroborated statement to a witness that the victim had died a slow and painful death where defendant's plea of guilty to first-degree murder established that a crime had been committed. State v Lee (1994) 335 NC 244, 439 SE2d 547.

A declaration is an unsworn statement made by a party to a transaction or by one having an interest in the existence of some fact in relation to the transaction. 83 A declaration is the assertion or statement of a fact, 84 whereas an admission is a voluntary acknowledgment made by a party of the existence or truth of certain facts 85 which are inconsistent with his or her claim in an action and, therefore, amount to proof against such party. 86 In other words, an admission is a position taken by an adversary, either personally or through an authorized agent, which is contrary to and inconsistent with the contention being made in the litigation. 87 An admission has also been defined as a statement, oral or written, 88 or conduct of a party or his or her representative, 89 suggesting any inference as to any fact in issue, or which is relevant or is deemed to be relevant to any such fact, made by or on behalf of any party to any proceeding. 90

Although some courts use the terms "confession" and "admission" interchangeably, 91 and rules concerning voluntariness requirements apply to both, 92 as applied to criminal law, an admission is something less than a confession and is but an acknowledgement of some fact or circumstance which in itself is insufficient to authorize a conviction, 93 or acknowledgement of guilt, 94 and which tends only toward the proof of the ultimate fact of guilt. 95 Admissions may be expressed or may be implied from conduct. 96

An admission by a party may be used as evidence against that party, 97 either as substantive evidence, 98 or for purposes of impeachment. 99

◆ Observation: Admissions are no more competent than any other kind of evidence when offered for the purpose of contradicting written instruments and are not admissible for that purpose, but ambiguities in a written instrument may be explained by admissions and declarations. 1 In addition, the contents of writings, recordings, or photographs may be proved by the written admission of the party against whom they are offered, without accounting for the nonproduction of the original. 2

While the Federal Rules of Evidence and the Uniform Rules of Evidence do not define "admission" or "declaration," they provide a definition for the term "statement." A statement is an oral or written assertion, or nonverbal conduct of a person as an assertion. 3

Portions of taperecorded conversation between bank robbery defendant and former girlfriend in which he mentioned cash he received from robberies and car he bought with cash were nonhearsay admissions of crimes he was charged with committing, not evidence of other crimes or of bad acts; even if they needed rule to authorize their admission, they would tend to show his motive for robberies, which is one of reasons for admission under rule. United States v DeAngelo (1994, CA8 Minn) 13 F3d 1228, petition for certiorari filed (May 3, 1994).

Ordinarily, the whole of an admission is to be taken and construed together. 4 The language of a party should be construed in view of the purpose for which it is used, and in connection with the surrounding circumstances and statements. 5 The statement will not be subjected to a strained construction in order to deduce therefrom an admission, nor will it be so construed as to include admissions of fact not reasonably inferable therefrom. 6

The fundamental rule that evidence is not admissible unless it is relevant to the issue or issues in the case 7 applies to admissions and declarations to the same extent that it does to other kinds of evidence. 8 If otherwise competent, admissions and declarations are admissible where, and only where, they tend to prove a principal or ultimate fact in issue, 9 and are directed to the establishment of pertinent evidentiary facts. 10 Consequently, an admission is allowed in evidence if it tends in some way to connect the accused with the crime charged. 11 In addition, an admission may be allowed in evidence to prove an accused's guilty knowledge. 12 An admission may also be allowed into evidence to identify the accused as the person who committed the crime charged. 13

In a number of cases it has been held that admissions or declarations otherwise admissible in evidence under an exception to the hearsay rule are not rendered inadmissible by reason of the fact that the declarant did not have personal knowledge of the subject matter, 14 although the lack of such knowledge affects the weight of such evidence. 15 It has been said that the personal knowledge requirement for witnesses 16 of the Federal Rules of Evidence does not pertain to admissions by party-opponents, 17 and a statement may qualify as an admission by a party regardless of personal knowledge. 18 Consequently, with respect to statements made by a party's agent or servant and offered against the party, the declarant need not have personal knowledge of the operative events. 19 In addition, some courts, but not all, 20 hold that coconspirator admissions under the coconspirator exception to the hearsay rule do not require personal knowledge. 21 It has been held that a coconspirator who testifies at trial to a description of events told to the coconspirator by a third party need not have personal knowledge of the events recounted, but that it is sufficient that the third party have personal knowledge of the events. 22 Although the Federal Rules of Evidence do not expressly incorporate a requirement that the declarant have personal knowledge of the facts to which the statement relates, such a requirement of firsthand knowledge has always been inherent in the statement against interest exception to the hearsay rule. 23 In addition, for an admission to be a judicial admission, it must be of a fact within the party's peculiar knowledge. 24

2. Requirements of Proof [758, 759]

§ 758 Generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

In order to prove an admission or declaration purported to be made by a party, it is not necessary to lay a foundation for its introduction by asking the declarant whether or not he or she made the statement in question. 25 Before a purported statement of a party is admissible against him or her, it is necessary to identify the declarant as the party, although this may be done by either direct or circumstantial evidence. 26

In proving oral utterances, verbal precision is not required, but the substance or effect is sufficient. 27 The reason for this rule is that the importance of single words in oral discourse is comparatively much less than in writings, and memory does not retain precise words, except of simple utterances and for a short time. 28 The admissibility of a statement does not depend upon the witnesses' ability to remember the exact words used; any inability to remember affects only the weight to be given the witnesses' testimony. 29 Nevertheless, a mere digest or summary is not sufficient to establish an oral statement. 30

Sound recordings have been utilized to show admissions and declarations in both criminal and civil proceedings. 31

§ 759 Proof of entire statement

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

If a statement is admissible in evidence as an admission or declaration, it is admissible as an entirety, including parts that are unfavorable, as well as those that are favorable, to the party offering it in evidence. 32 In the event a statement admitted in evidence constitutes part of a conversation or correspondence, the opponent is entitled to have placed in evidence all that was said or written by or to the declarant in the course of such conversation or correspondence, 33 provided the other statements have some bearing upon, or connection with, the admission or declaration in evidence, 34 and are equally trustworthy. 35 The fact that the additional and qualifying statements may be favorable to the party offering them—that is, may be self-serving—has been said to afford no basis for excluding them. 36 However, the general rule providing for the admissibility of all that was said by the declarant at the same time and upon the same subject matter does not extend to subjects which are remote and distinct from the object of inquiry at the trial. 37

The general principles discussed above apply in criminal as well as in civil cases. It is an elementary rule of law that when admissions of one on trial for the commission of a criminal offense are allowed in evidence against him or her, all that he or she said in that connection must also be permitted to go to the jury, either through cross-examination of the witness who testified to the admissions or through witnesses produced by the accused. 38 The fact that declarations made by the accused were self-serving does not preclude their introduction in evidence as a part of the whole statement, provided they are relevant to, 39 and were made on the same occasion as the statements introduced by, 40 the prosecution. However, there is authority that a trial court, in considering the admissibility of an accused's statement, must excise or delete any reference to prior criminality that is not admissible under an exception to the general rule of exclusion, unless such excision would significantly impair the meaning and evidentiary value of the admissible parts of the accused's statement. 41 If the reference to prior criminality cannot be excised without impairing the meaning and evidentiary value of the admissible parts of the statement, the court may be required to instruct the jury on the limited purpose for which the evidence is being received. 42

§ 759 ----Proof of entire statement [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Defendant's hearsay statement to his girlfriend on the same day he confessed to the police that he had shot a gun but had not shot anyone was not admissible under the principle that, when the State offers part of a confession, the accused may require the entire confession to be admitted into evidence where defendant's statement to his girlfriend was not made at the same time as the confession and was not a part of the confession, and the State did not attempt to introduce testimony concerning defendant's self-serving declaration and thus did not open the door to its admission. State v Jackson (1995) 340 NC 301, 457 SE2d 862.

There was no merit to defendant's contention that his rights were violated by the introduction of a redacted confession and that, based on GS § 8C-1, Rule 106, when a part of his confession was introduced, he had a right to have the other part introduced, since defendant was in no way prejudiced by the redaction. State v Littlejohn (1995) 340 NC 750, 459 SE2d 629.

3. Party Admissions [760-784]

a. In General [760-769]

§ 760 Generally; admissions of party-opponent

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

In both civil and criminal cases, according to some statutes, a statement of a party is not considered hearsay and may be used against the party. ⁴³ The Federal Rules of Evidence ⁴⁴ and the Uniform Rules of Evidence ⁴⁵ define as "not hearsay" the statement of a party that was made in the party's individual or representative capacity when that statement is offered against the party. Many states have similar statutes and rules. ⁴⁶

◆ Observation: Admissions by party-opponents are not limited to statements offered against a party and made in an individual or representative capacity by a party. Admissions by party-opponents also include statements offered against a party which are: (1) statements of which the party has manifested an adoption or belief in its truth; 47 (2) statements by a person authorized by the party to make a statement concerning the subject; 48 (3) statements by the party's agent or servant concerning a matter within the scope of the agency or employment, made during the existence of the relationship; 49 or (4) statements by a coconspirator of a party during the course and in furtherance of the conspiracy. 50

Evidentiary admissions may be made in statements made pursuant to the Federal Rule of Evidence governing admissions of a party-opponent. 51 Admissions by a party-opponent are admissible as substantive evidence, 52 unless some other exclusionary rule applies, 53 or for impeachment purposes. 54 A party-opponent's declaration is admissible for any inference which the trial court can reasonably draw from the statement regarding any issues involved in the case. 55 Some courts state that it is not even necessary to call one's opponent as a witness or to introduce his or her deposition, before offering the admission of a party opponent. 56

Allowing such an admission into evidence is considered fair, as the party-opponent's case cannot be prejudiced by an inability to cross-examine himself or herself. 57 In addition, a party would presumably not state anything against his or her interest unless it were true. 58 A party's admission is considered to have special evidentiary value when offered against the party making the admission because that party is discredited, like a witness impeached by contradictory statements, by the party's own statements inconsistent with his or her present claim. 59

A statement by a party may qualify as an admission regardless of——the circumstances in which it was made. 60

—the concession of the party that he or she made it. 61

—general requirements applicable to exceptions to the hearsay rule, such as a foundation, 62 trustworthiness, 63 or personal knowledge. 64

—the nature of the statement as being too conclusory, 65 in the form of an opinion, 66 or as not being a statement against interest. 67

◆ Caution: Although admissible as "not hearsay," a party's admission may still be excluded on constitutional grounds, such as the privilege against self-incrimination, 68 or the associated doctrine of confessions, 69 or by reason of exclusionary provisions found elsewhere in the Federal Rules of Evidence. 70 In addition, admissions made by a party-opponent under a duty imposed by a statute which makes the communication confidential may be excluded under the Federal Rules. 71

◆ Practice guide: Since a party-opponent's admission may be offered only against that particular party, an out-of-court statement introduced as an admission of one party could not be considered as evidence adversely affecting the claims of other parties. 72 It has been suggested that the trial court take precautions to avoid adverse effects by excising references to other parties or giving cautionary instructions. 73

§ 760 ----Generally; admissions of party- opponent [SUPPLEMENT]

Practice Aids: The admissibility of inculpatory statements in Washington under the rule of declarations against interest, 70 Wash LR 3:859 (1995).

Admissibility as "not hearsay" of statement by party's attorney under Federal Rules of Evidence 801(d)(2)(C) or 801(d)(2)(D). 117 ALR Fed 599.

Case authorities:

Insurer has no duty to defend or indemnify driver of insured vehicle, where pursuit/collision incident occurred in October 1990 and insurer received no notice of it until August 1992, and insurer was prejudiced by delay, even though claimant contends that insurer's evidence of prejudice—driver's statements to investigator that are contained in investigator's affidavit—are inadmissible hearsay, because such statements are admissions by party- opponent and are not hearsay under FRE 801(d)(2). State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v Lucca (1993, DC Me) 838 F Supp 670.

In terminated anesthesiologist's case alleging antitrust violations and state claims for breach of contract, defamation, and tortious interference with prospective economic advantage, statement by defense counsel in memorandum of law filed in support of defendants' motion to dismiss complaint in earlier related case was properly admitted as admission of party; statement admitting hospital's error in attributing two incidents of asystole to plaintiff was made in legal brief filed with court subject to penalty of sanctions and defense counsel was acting in authorized capacity when making assertion. Purgess v Sharrock (1994, CA2 NY) 33 F3d 134.

Police commissioner's statement that non-arrest policy in domestic violence incidents would amount to equal protection violation was not admission by county as to legality of its pre-existing policy; commissioner testified that he knew nothing about arrest policy under prior commissioner, his legal insights concerning legality of policy that may or may not have prevailed before he became commissioner did not amount to party admission, and his opinion would be inadmissible anyway because it was legal conclusion concerning ultimate issue. Eagleston v Guido (1994, CA2 NY) 41 F3d 865.

In personal injury action by customer who tried to push open locked glass door at store, evidence of person's statement in response to passerby's request for tie to bind customer's wounds that person in question lacked authority to give tie away but that passerby could buy one, was admissible under FRE 801(d)(2)(D), because evidence was relevant to establishing whether speaker was employee and had authority to speak for store. Hill v F.R. Tripler & Co. (1994, SD NY) 868 F Supp 593.

Jury was not subjected to fraud by plaintiff's use of defendant's First Answer to show his ownership of apartments, where tenant sued landlords for physical and emotional damages suffered when she was raped in apartment, even if First Answer was "admittedly false", because abandoned pleading is admissible as admission of party-opponent under FRE 801(d), and defendant should have rebutted assertion of ownership to cure alleged falsity. Johnson v Goldstein (1994, ED Pa) 864 F Supp 490.

In private governmental structure of condominium association, resident-members of standing and ad hoc committees to which governing Board of Directors had delegated specific duties were involved in decisional process leading to age discrimination plaintiff's termination and thus association's agents for purposes of admitting their statements regarding plaintiff's age as consideration affecting her continued employment as admissions of party-opponent. EEOC v Watergate at Landmark Condominium (1994, CA4 Va) 24 F3d 635, 64 BNA FEP Cas 1408, 64 CCH EPD ¶ 43149, 39 Fed Rules Evid Serv 671, cert den, without op (1994, US) 115 S Ct 185, 65 BNA FEP Cas 1792.

Testimony regarding defendant's statements were properly admitted as admissions of party-opponent, not as coconspirator statements, since no conspiracy was charged, hence court did not err in not giving jury instruction regarding admission of coconspirator statements. United States v Johnson-Wilder (1994, CA7 Ill) 29 F3d 1100.

Terminated executive is entitled to admission of evidence in support of claim that company discriminated against him as Mexican-American, where evidence involves his conversations with other executives regarding expense account fraud and specifically practice of claiming reimbursement for business travel tickets purchased with frequent flier miles, for which executive was fired, because, assuming others' statements were made during existence of declarants' employment relationship, they can be attributed to company as admission under FRE 801(d)(2)(D) since they concerned matters within scope of employment. Garduno v Quaker Oats Co. (1994, ND Ill) 863 F Supp 676, 65 BNA FEP Cas 1689.

Motion to strike draft letter written by unknown agent of credit services corporation is denied, even though sentence being used to show that corporation classified certain client as "travel agent/tour operator" and unacceptable business was crossed out in letter, because crossed-out sentence is still "statement" or "assertion" of party offered against that party, and is admissible under FRE 801(d)(2). South Cent. Bank & Trust Co. v Citicorp Credit Servs. (1994, ND Ill) 863 F Supp 635.

Postal worker's affidavit constitutes admissible evidence and will be considered in federal tort claim case involving worker, victim, and worker's personal insurer, where worker asserts that insurance agent told her that "they have never had any problems" in providing coverage to postal rural route carriers, because such statement, although hearsay, qualifies as admission by party-opponent under FRE 801(d)(2)(D), excepting from hearsay rule statement offered against party that was made by party's agent concerning matter within scope of agency or employment and made during existence of relationship. Pender v United States (1994, ND Ind) 866 F Supp 1129.

The trial court did not err when trying defendant for the first-degree murder of his wife by allowing the State to question defendant about statements he had made to a co-worker in which he allegedly threatened to kill his wife. The prosecutor only once even arguably referred to a statement by the co-worker and there was no prejudice from that statement because there was plenary other evidence that defendant had threatened his wife's life on a number of occasions prior to shooting her. The defendant's comments concerning his own statements, to the extent they were hearsay, fall within the exception to the hearsay rule for admissions by a party opponent. § 761 Requirement that statement be made by party; statements made in representative capacity

In order for the admission of a party-opponent made in an individual or representative capacity 74 to be admissible, the out-of-court statement must have been made by a party to the litigation. 75 A declaration by one associated with the action, but not a party in it, is inadmissible. 76 Nevertheless, if the statement is offered against the party while acting in a representative capacity, there need be no inquiry as to whether the party was acting in that capacity when the statement was made to determine if the statement is a party admission; 77 the statement need only be relevant to the party's affairs as a representative. 78

Plaintiff suing for asbestos- related personal injuries should not have been permitted to introduce testimony of defendant's expert from unrelated state trial as admission of defendant, since it was hearsay because there was no finding that expert was agent of defendant and authorized to speak on behalf of defendant; because expert witness is charged with duty of giving expert opinion regarding matter before court, expert witness who is not agent of party who called him cannot be authorized to make admission for that party. Kirk v Raymark Indus. (1995, CA3 Pa) 51 F3d 1206, reh gr, vacated (1995, CA3 Pa) 1995 US App LEXIS 12529 and substituted op, on reh, remanded (1995, CA3 Pa) 1995 US App LEXIS 19940.

The hearsay barrier is removed only when the statement is offered against the party, not for the party. 79 However, an admission of a party-opponent under the Federal Rule of Evidence governing individual and representative admissions 80 is admissible even if the statement was not against the party's interest at the time the statement was made, providing the statement is contrary to the party's position at trial. 81 Moreover, since the Federal Rule requires only that the admission be contrary to the party's position at trial, the admission may be introduced against the party through the trial testimony of a co-defendant, who is testifying on his or her own behalf. 82

§ 763 Statements of accused in criminal case

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table
Go to Supplement

In the criminal context, an admission can be a statement of a party that tends to incriminate or connect the party with the crime charged, or which manifests consciousness of guilt. 83 As in the case of confessions, 84 statements or declarations made by one accused of a crime which are relative to the crime from which, in connection with other evidence, an inference of guilt can be drawn, are admissible, 85 at least insofar as such statements have been made by the accused freely and voluntarily, without deprivation of constitutional rights. 86 Untrue denials can constitute admissions, 87 since exculpatory statements proven false evidence a consciousness of guilt and therefore bear directly on the issue of guilt or innocence. 88

In determining whether a defendant's statement constitutes an admission, the court must consider the defendant's statement in light of the surrounding circumstances. 89 Where there is conflicting evidence of the circumstances surrounding an incriminating statement or a confession, it is the duty of the trial judge to determine its admissibility, and if the trial judge decides it is admissible his or her decision will not be disturbed on appeal unless found to be manifestly contrary to the great weight of the evidence. 90 In federal criminal cases, the Federal Rule of Evidence pertaining to admissions by party-opponents in an individual or representative capacity 91 has been utilized in connection with a party's—

—inculpatory oral statements made to law enforcement officers, 92 including postarrest statements made during routine booking procedures, 93 and statements made to law enforcement officers working undercover. 94

—inculpatory statements made to other persons. 95

–inculpatory written statements. 96

Statements made in the context of plea bargaining constitute an exception to the general rule of admissibility. 97

◆ Comment: Some courts state that they perceive no meaningful distinction between a "confession" and an "inculpatory statement" for purposes of the right against self-incrimination. 98 The requirements that apply to confessions and other statements as to custodial interrogations, 99 voluntariness of statements 1 and Miranda warnings 2 also apply in the case of admissions.

§ 763 ----Statements of accused in criminal case [SUPPLEMENT]

Case authorities:

Defendant failed to raise issue of voluntariness of his statements to investigating officers below, and therefore waived right to raise issue on appeal; pretrial motion to suppress was based on Federal Rules of Evidence 609(b) and 804(b). United States v Yannott (1994, CA6 Mich) 42 F3d 999, cert den (1995, US) 130 L Ed 2d 1125, 115 S Ct 1172.

The defendant's statement to a former employer that he had killed 3 people and could kill again was admissible as an admission of a party as an exception to the hearsay rule. Wyatt v State (1994, Fla) 641 So 2d 1336, 19 FLW S 437.

The trial court did not err when trying defendant for the first- degree murder of his wife by allowing the State to question defendant about statements he had made to a co- worker in which he allegedly threatened to kill his wife. The prosecutor only once even arguably referred to a statement by the co- worker and there was no prejudice from that statement because there was plenary other evidence that defendant had threatened his wife's life on a number of occasions prior to shooting her. The defendant's comments concerning his own statements, to the extent they were hearsay, fall within the exception to the hearsay rule for admissions by a party opponent. GS § 8C-1, Rule 801(d)(A). State v Collins (1994) 335 NC 729, 440 SE2d 559.

The trial court did not err in a noncapital first-degree murder prosecution by admitting defendant's inculpatory statements where defendant contended that the statements were not made knowingly, intelligently, or voluntarily, but none of the evidence presented suggests that defendant's mental capacity was in any way impaired, that his will was overpowered, or that the officers attempted to physically or psychologically torture defendant to evoke a confession, the court found that "defendant was never promised anything, was never threatened, and had no offers of reward or of assistance with any prosecution in the event he did cooperate with the officers," and defendant made a correction in the written statement. Applying the totality of the circumstances standard, there was no error in concluding that defendant's constitutional rights were not violated and that the statements were admissible. State v Corbett (1994) 339 NC 313, 451 SE2d 252.

A statement in a prosecution for conspiracy and accessory to murder that the coconspirator brought up the discussions about killing the victims was hearsay, but was admissible under GS § 8C-1, Rule 801(a) as a party admission. State v Johnson (1995)

340 NC 32, 455 SE2d 644.

A "fantasy statement" made by defendant to another inmate while he was in Central Prison awaiting trial which detailed defendant's participation in the shooting of the male victim and the kidnapping, rape and murder of each of the two female victims was admissible as an admission of a party opponent. G.S. § 8C-1, Rule 801(d)(A).

Defendant's statement to the inmate clearly implicated defendant in the crimes charged, and his attempt to couch this confession in terms of make believe and fantasy does not render his inculpatory statement inadmissible hearsay. Furthermore, the statement was relevant under G.S. § 8C-1, Rule 401. State v Gregory (1995) 340 NC 365, 459 SE2d 638.

In a prosecution of defendant for the murder of her husband, the trial court did not err in admitting defendant's statement, "Honey, why did you make me do it?" while she was viewing her husband's body at the funeral home, since the statement was too ambiguous to be incriminating and was an admission by a party opponent within the purview of GS § 8C- 1, Rule 801(d)(A); the statement was obviously relevant; and the admission, though prejudicial to defendant, was not unfairly so. State v Lambert (1995) 341 NC 36, 460 SE2d 123.

§ 764 --Corpus delicti rule; necessity of independent corroboration

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Generally, like confessions, 3 post-offense admissions require independent corroboration. 4 Admissions require corroboration, at least where the admission is made after the fact to an official charged with investigating the possibility of wrongdoing, and where the statement embraces an element vital to the Government's case. 5 Some courts state that it is sufficient if the corroboration supports the essential facts admitted sufficiently to justify a jury inference of their truth, 6 and that the prosecution need not introduce independent evidence of every element of the crime. 7 Generally, the corpus delicti rule requires that independent of any post-crime admissions made by the defendant, the state must prove that the loss or injury occurred by the criminal conduct of another. 8 Some courts hold that the state must introduce sufficient evidence to establish that the criminal conduct at the core of the offense has occurred. 9 According to some courts, the state must also introduce independent evidence tending to establish the trustworthiness of the admissions, unless they are, by virtue of special circumstances, inherently reliable. 10 However, some courts hold that the corpus delicti rule no longer exists and independent evidence establishing trustworthiness is the only requirement. 11

The corpus delicti cannot be proven solely by an admission. 12 However, if the accused's extrajudicial statement enables the state to discover corroborating evidence of a particular crime confessed, the corroborating evidence need not be totally independent of the extrajudicial statement to establish complete proof that the crime has been committed. 13

◆ Comment: Pre-offense statements do not require corroboration because they contain none of the inherent weaknesses of admissions made after the fact. 14

Some courts state that the corpus delicti must be proved to a probable cause standard, 15 or a clear and convincing evidence standard, 16 while others state that only a prima facie showing is required and the corpus delicti may be proved by circumstantial evidence and inferences drawn from circumstantial evidence. 17 In such cases, it is for the trial court to determine that a prima facie showing has been made. 18

Despite the general rule, there is some authority that makes a distinction between confessions and admissions, for purposes of the corpus delicti rule. In states in which the corroboration rule is limited to confessions, an admission may corroborate an extrajudicial confession. 19 Thus, while confessions are inadmissible until the state presents prima facie evidence of the corpus delicti, admissions are admissible as prima facie evidence of the corpus delicti. 20

In jurisdictions that state the corpus delicti rule in terms of admissions, as well as confessions, the substantive part of the corpus delicti rule requires that the state first present evidence independent of the defendant's own statements which is adequate to prove both elements of corpus delicti to a probable cause standard, and, second, present evidence, including any post-crime admissions or confessions made by the defendant, which is adequate to establish the corpus delicti beyond a reasonable doubt. 21 The procedural part of the rule may leave to the discretion of the trial court the determination of the order of proof of the corpus delicti. 22 Once the state has established corpus delicti to a probable cause standard without reliance on the defendant's admissions, those admissions are appropriately considered by the court in determining whether the state, at the close of its case, has ultimately proved corpus delicti beyond a reasonable doubt. 23

§ 765 --Plea bargaining

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Various states hold that communications made in the course of plea bargaining are not admissible into evidence. 24 The Federal Rules of Evidence 25 and the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure 26 state that, subject to certain limited exceptions, any statement made in the course of plea discussions with an attorney for the prosecuting authority which do not result in a plea of guilty or which result in a plea of guilty later withdrawn is not admissible as evidence against a participant in the plea discussions. 27 The plea bargaining rule is an exception to the general rule that admissions by party defendants are admissible, and was established to encourage use of plea bargaining agreements. 28 Although such statements are not admissible even if the plea is later withdrawn, 29 they may be admissible if the defendant breaches the plea agreement and the statements were not involuntary. 30

The plea bargain rule seeks to promote negotiated dispositions of criminal cases by giving the defendant protection from involuntary self-incrimination at two ends of the plea-bargaining spectrum: while the defendant is negotiating over the disposition of the case and while the defendant is offering or entering a plea that is rejected or later withdrawn. 31 Consequently, statements made subsequent to a plea agreement are not protected by the plea bargaining rule. 32 In addition, it has been held that grand jury testimony given after formalization of a plea agreement but before the defendant has entered the plea, where the defendant withdraws from the agreement and pleads not guilty instead, is not excluded by the rule. 33

However, every statement made as the result of a plea bargain is not inadmissible. 34 In order for such admissions to be excludable, criminal charges must be lodged against the defendant or such criminal charges must be imminent, and the admission must be part of some type of arrangement. 35 The statements must be made by someone expressly authorized to negotiate with the defendant. 36 The language of the federal rules provides no room to expand their scope from plea negotiations with government attorneys to cover discussions with law enforcement officers generally, unless perhaps a law enforcement officer with express authority from a government attorney enters into negotiations with a defendant. 37 Thus, a statement made by a defendant to an unauthorized agent some two weeks after the plea agreement was finalized was not made in connection with the negotiations for the plea bargain and was voluntary and admissible. 38 In addition, the statements must contain an offer to plead guilty or indicate a serious effort at negotiating such a plea. 39 Conversations with government agents do not constitute plea discussions unless the defendant exhibits a subjective belief that he or she is negotiating a plea, and that belief is reasonable under the circumstances. 40 Mere inquiry into possible defenses, 41 preliminary discussions prior to any specific plea bargains, 42 statements made to federal agents after arrest in hope of initiating a plea bargain, 43 or offers of cooperation and attendant admissions, 44 which are not plea bargaining, may be admissible. Moreover, the prosecution is not foreclosed from proving material, relevant facts from independent evidence and sources, even though those facts were discussed during plea negotiations. 45

Where the rule excluding admissions made during plea bargaining is violated, convictions may be reversed and the case remanded for a new trial. 46 However, under the doctrine of invited error, it may not be reversible error where the government cross-examines the accused about plea negotiations after the accused discusses a plea bargain situation in his or her direct testimony. 47

◆ Observation: There is some authority that the prohibition against the admissibility of statements made during plea negotiations is not generally subject to waiver. 48 Nevertheless, if a defendant fails to object at trial to the introduction of such testimony, he or she has implicitly waived the protection. 49

§ 767 Admissions by one of several coparties

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Since a party-opponent's admission may be offered only against that particular party, an out-of-court statement introduced as an admission of one party could not be considered as evidence adversely affecting the claims of other parties. 57 There is authority that the admissions of a party are not admissible against his or her co-parties, unless they consent to it, adopt the admission as their own, 58 or there is privity 59 between the parties making the admission and the co-parties. 60 It has been suggested that the trial court take precautions to avoid adverse effects by excising references to other parties or giving cautionary instructions. 61 In the situation where a plaintiff presents to the court sufficient information from which a jury could reasonably find that an admission was made by one of a limited group of defendants, the admission should be received in evidence, and the jury should be instructed that it may consider the admission against each member of the group of defendants who fails to persuade the jury that he or she did not make the statement. 62

§ 768 Admissions by landowners of value of property

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Courts often hold or recognize that evidence of unaccepted offers to sell are admissible against the offeror landowner as a party admission or an admission against interest, 63 unless the offer is too remote in point of time 64 or the landowner's valuation did not substantially differ from the price contained in the option. 65 Likewise, in general, in eminent domain proceedings, offers of sale made by the owner, and other admissions as to the value of the property and the amount of damages, are competent evidence against the owner, if sufficiently near the time of the taking to be of service to the jury, and if not made as part of an attempt to compromise. 66 However, where an offer is made under circumstances of economic duress, the offer does not constitute an admission. 67 Consequently, it has been held that the price at which a landowner offers to sell land to a condemnor is not admissible as a party admission of the value of the property in question since the offer was made under the compulsion of condemnation. 68

Nevertheless, it is generally held that evidence of an unaccepted offer to sell property is not admissible in favor of the landowner or offeror as evidence of the value of the property, 69 but rather, may be excludable as a self-serving declaration. 70

§ 769 Effect of extrajudicial admissions

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Extrajudicial admissions are only evidence of liability; they do not serve as conclusive proof of liability. 71 The weight and probable force of an extrajudicial admission are matters for the trier of fact. 72 When a party's out-of-court admissions are allowed into evidence, that party is entitled to explain the circumstances surrounding the admissions so that the trier may properly evaluate them. 73 Although some courts state that there is no reason to preclude the court from considering such evidence, at the summary judgment stage, to challenge the credibility of an individual's factual assertions in an affidavit, 74 other courts have provided that an extrajudicial admission is not a proper basis for summary judgment. 75

b. Judicial Admissions [770-784]

(1). In General [770-773]

§ 770 Generally

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

A judicial admission is a formal statement, either by party or his or her attorney, in course of judicial proceeding which removes an admitted fact from field of controversy. 76 It is a voluntary concession of fact by a party or a party's attorney during judicial proceedings. 77

Judicial admissions are used as a substitute for legal evidence at trial. 78 Admissions made in the course of judicial proceedings or judicial admissions waive or dispense with, the production of evidence, 79 and the actual proof of facts 80 by conceding for the purpose of litigation that the proposition of the fact alleged by the opponent is true. 81 Responses which are equivocal in nature do not dispense with a need for proof of facts submitted. 82 If a party, as a witness, unequivocally concedes a fact, such concession for the purposes of the trial has the force of a judicial admission. 83

A judicial admission is a deliberate, clear, unequivocal statement of a party 84 about a concrete fact within that party's peculiar knowledge, 85 not a matter of law. 86 Where the testimony of the party relates, not to a fact peculiarly within his or her own knowledge and as to which the party could not be mistaken, but is in the nature of an estimate or opinion as to which he or she may honestly be mistaken, the party does not unequivocally concede that the fact is in accord with the opinion expressed and there is no injustice in permitting the court to consider the other evidence in the court, and determine from all the evidence what the actual facts are. 87 In order to constitute a judicial admission, the statement must be one of fact, not opinion. 88 To be a judicial admission, a statement must be contrary to an essential fact or defense asserted by the person giving the testimony; it must be deliberate, clear and unequivocal; the giving of conclusive effect to the statement must be consistent with public policy upon which the rule is based; and the statement may not be destructive of the opposing party's theory of recovery. 89 The determination of whether a party's statement is sufficiently unequivocal to be considered a judicial admission is a question of law. 90

Judicial admissions are evidence against the party who made them, 91 and are considered conclusive 92 and binding 93 as to the party making the judicial admission. A judicial admission bars the admitting party from disputing it. 94 The party who made a judicial admission may not controvert the admission on trial or on appeal, and may not create a question of fact for purposes of a summary judgment motion by trying to contradict a previous judicial admission. 95 However, there is authority that a judicial admission may only be revoked on the ground of an error of fact. 96

A judicial admission of fact may carry with it an admission of other facts necessarily implied from it. 97

§ 771 Contexts in which judicial admissions arise

Judicial admissions may occur at any point during the litigation process. 98 An admission in open court is a judicial admission. 99 Admissions in pleadings may also be considered judicial admissions. 1 In addition, admissions pursuant to requests to admit may be judicial admissions. 2

◆ Practice guide: The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure state that a party may serve on any other party a written request for the admission, for purposes of the pending action only, of the truth of any matters within the scope of discovery under the Rules 3 set forth in the request that relate to statements on opinions of fact or of the application of law to fact including the genuineness of any documents described in the request. 4 Any matter admitted under this Rule is conclusively established unless the court on motion permits withdrawal or amendment of the admission. 5

There is authority that allegations in a petition, admitted in an answer, are judicial admissions on that issue. 6 Although statements made during a discovery deposition are normally treated only as evidentiary admissions, 7 which may be contradicted, such statements may be so deliberate, detailed, and unequivocal, as to matters with the party's personal knowledge that the statements will be held to be judicial admissions. 8 An admission in a defendant's answer to an allegation in a complaint may also be binding as a judicial admission. 9 There is also authority that judicial admissions may arise during opening statements and closing arguments. 10 However, where there is ambiguity or doubt it is presumed an attorney did not intend to make a judicial admission during argument. 11 In addition, statements of counsel's conception of the legal theories of the case are not binding judicial admissions. 12 However, some courts state that judicial admissions may be made in a brief. 13

There is authority that to determine whether a statement is a judicial admission depends upon the circumstances of each case. 14 Some courts state that the test for whether an admission should be treated as a judicial admission is whether the circumstances and conditions give rise to the probability of error in the party's own testimony. 15

§ 772 Evidential admissions distinguished

View Entire Section
Go to Parallel Reference Table

Generally, evidential admissions are words or conduct admissible in evidence against the party making them, but subject to rebuttal or denial, 16 whereas judicial admissions are binding, 17 unless the court, in the exercise of its discretion, permits the admission to be withdrawn, explained, or modified. 18 Unlike judicial admissions, 19 evidentiary admissions may be controverted or explained by the party. 20 Evidentiary admissions may be made in, among other things, pleadings in a case other than the one being tried. 21 Evidentiary admissions may also be made in pleadings that have been superseded 22 amended, 23 or withdrawn, 24 answers to interrogatories, 25 and other statements made pursuant to the Federal Rule of Evidence 26 governing admissions by party-opponents. 27 An admission in an unverified answer may be an evidentiary admission, although it is superseded by an amended answer and has otherwise ceased to be part of the record. 28

Treatment of a declaration as a judicial admission, rather than an evidentiary admission, depends upon an evaluation of all the testimony, and not just a part of it and upon appraisal of the testimony in the light of the testimony of the other witnesses and a consideration of their respective opportunities to observe the facts about which they testify. 29
